Dream Catcher®

Legendary "Toasted" Irish Liqueur

The origins of Dream Catcher, an old Gaelic recipe, started in a historic farm house with a pot still in County Cavan, Ireland.

A farmer was inspired to blend an elixir of the natural flavor of toasted chestnuts and other superb ingredients with Premium Irish Spirits to create the taste of toasted Irish Liqueur. This wonderful treasure was discovered several years ago and is now coming to the world.

The farmer claimed it was a "Dream worth catching".

From the Top / Jacqueline Houton

AND THE WINNER IS ...

"SHE ALWAYS HAD THE 'IT' QUALITY, from the time she was a kid," our columnist John D. Spooner says of our cover subject, Téa Leoni, whom he's known for decades. "It was almost as if she had an electric field around her that forced people to pay attention." That's certainly true today with her star turn on the CBS drama Madam Secretary, in which she brings heart and gravitas to her role as secretary of state. In real life, she's also got a winning sense of humor, as you'll see in our interview on p. 52.

Of course, Leoni's hardly the only winner you'll get to know in these pages. Every spring, the Improper staff begins months of preparations for our biggest issue of the year, debating the relative merits of baked goods and indie bands, killing off award categories and birthing new ones, to give props to the people and places that represent the very best in this town right now. Assembling hundreds of awards entails some long hours, but to me they're well worth it, because I get to learn so much about the city I love. I hope this issue holds many discoveries for you too, whether you'd like to feast on Iraqi street eats (p. 60), raise a glass where the industry crowd flocks for last call (p. 86), shop for cutting-edge fashions in the comfort of your living room (p. 125) or get a killer workout while helping out at-risk youth (p. 134). Of course, even in a jumbo-sized issue, we can't capture everything that makes life in Boston great—so if there's a local treasure you think deserves recognition, don't hesitate to drop me a line. I already have a file of nominations started for next year.

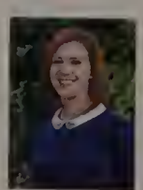
WRITERS

Liz Bomze is a senior editor at Cook's Illustrated magazine and freelance writer who lives in Brookline but is a Philly girl at heart. She can't pass up a bowl of noodles or a great novel, considers Chinatown her second home and dreams of someday owning a pie shop. She contributed to the Goods + Services and Food + Drink sections.

Alexandra Cavallo is the deputy managing editor of The Improper. Formerly of The Boston Phoenix and Metro Boston, she's covered "beats" such as horror movies (the bloodier the better), music (the sadder the better), TV, gross fast food "reviews" and snarky pop culture commentary. She contributed to the Bars + Clubs and Arts + Entertainment sections.

Renata Certo-Ware is a writer, blogger and alliteration enthusiast. She's covered fashion and travel for The Improper, The Boston Globe, The Boston Phoenix and Business of Fashion, and she waxes cynical at untouchableblog.com. She recently started wearing (faux) leather pants as a lifestyle choice, and it's going pretty well. She contributed to the Fashion section.

Ezra Dyer has contributed to Boston's Best for 16 consecutive years, and he's been The Improper's humor columnist since 1999. In the realm of cars, Ezra is the automotive editor for Popular Mechanics, a columnist for Car and Driver and a video producer for Yahoo! Autos. He contributed to the People + Places and Sports sections.



Cheryl Fenton is a Boston-based freelance writer for magazines and online publications. A self-proclaimed "kitchen sink" writer, she has covered everything from interior design (yes, including the kitchen sink) to fasiiion, beauty and food for The Boston Globe, Boston magazine, Boston Common, Glamour, InStyle and Whole Foods. She contributed to the Beauty + Health section.

Scott Kearnan is a Boston-based writer and editor focusing on lifestyle and arts and entertainment for outlets such as Zagat, Jaunted, Boston Spirit, The Improper and Boston magazine. He's also a Leo with Gemini rising, so in other words: Run. Follow his work and pop-culture musings on Twitter @thewritestuffSK. He contributed to the Bars + Clubs and Food + Drink sections.

MC Slim JB is a restaurant critic and food-and-drinks feature writer who has contributed to many local and national publications, including The Improper, Boston magazine, Serious Eats, DigBoston, Maxim, The Boston Phoenix, Stuff Magazine, AskMen, Gayot and CitySearch. A New England native, he is a longtime resident of Boston. He contributed to the Food + Drink section.

Carley Thornell is a travel writer and longtime journalist whose work has appeared in The Boston Globe, The Boston Herald, Boston magazine and The Eagle-Tribune, where she was on a team that won a Pulitzer Prize. During the past three years, she's been to more than 20 countries and enjoyed countless culinary adventures. She contributed to the Weddings section.

THE BOSTON PUBLIC MARKET IS READY FOR ITS CLOSE-UP

NICOLE WISNIA

Cornering the Market

After years of planning, the Boston Public Market opens its doors this month.

For years, the building above the Haymarket T station was simply a shell that housed towering vents constructed during the Big Dig. But on July 30, the space that started out with just one electrical outlet will become the Boston Public Market, home to nearly 40 local purveyors selling fresh New England produce, meats, cheeses and other foodstuffs and wares. Open Wednesday through Sunday, 8 am to 8 pm, the year-round market will be a sort of "connective tissue" for the area, says CEO Elizabeth Morningstar, with eight entrances and exits to allow shoppers ample access.

The 28,000-square-foot space demanded careful planning—seafood operations are closest to the service bay, Bon Me's expected long lines can stretch toward the Rose F. Kennedy Greenway, and coffee, doughnuts and Taza's hot chocolate bar are on the building's Congress Street side to catch some of the area's 100,000 daily commuters. Bees from the Boston Honey Company demonstration hive will be able to peep Stow Greenhouse's wall of flowers through their glass enclosure. This setup, Morningstar says, is meant to prompt conversation: "The difference between a public market and a grocery store is just sort of the magic thing that happens when you discover something new." It's already promoting collaboration between the vendors themselves, with Matt Baumann of Boston Smoked Fish Co. saying he plans to use Mamadou's Bakery bread for his smoked bluefish rolls and salmon sliders, and he'll direct shoppers to pair their fish with wine from Massachusetts Farm Winery and Growers.

Teamwork continues in the KITCHEN, a 3,200-square-foot space that will offer cooking classes courtesy of America's Test Kitchen and the vendors themselves, broadcast on a nine-screen wall in the hub of the market, giving shoppers a taste of how their baskets came to be—and what they can become. / Meghan Kavanaugh

A TOP TOQUE'S PERSONAL SHOPPING LIST

Chef Chris Douglass, who serves on the board of the Boston Public Market when he's not heading up the kitchens at Tavolo and Ashmont Grill, mapped out a trip to the market to prep for a backyard pig roast—and exercised restraint. "Really, I would want to buy everything," he says

GREEK OUT

A NEW MEZE CONCEPT BOLSTERS THE WATERFRONT'S DINING SCENE.

Committee
50 Northern Ave., Boston
(617-737-5051)
committeeboston.com

CLOSE YOUR EYES, AND YOU CAN imagine Fan Pier after the final construction crane has rested: more condos, an expanded ICA, a park and even a movie theater across the street. It's a vision that's more than a decade in the making.

It took far less time for George Aboujaoude and Demetri Tsolakis to dream up Committee, which opened late last month on Fan Pier. In fact, the guys behind Cafeteria and Bijou both say the concept for the Mediterranean meze restaurant came together quite naturally. "We're really just doing our background. I'm Lebanese, and he's Greek," Aboujaoude says. Tsolakis agrees: "When we go to dinner, everything turns into meze anyway. All the entrees go into the middle of the table, and we share with each other."

Committee gained an extra lift when celebrity chef Diane Kochilas—"kind of the mother of Mediterranean cuisine," says Tsolakis—signed on as a consulting chef. Her influence can be found throughout the dinner menu, which is split into two sections. The cold meze ($6-$11) include dishes such as sardine plaki, served with grilled bread to soak up the tomato-based sauce, and okra horiatiki, an update on the traditional Greek salad. The warm meze ($9-$16) range from the savory batata mahshi, a potato stuffed with pork, to the simple grilled haloumi with grapes to the seasonal zucchini crisps.

Similarly Mediterranean-focused is the beverage program under the direction of Peter Szigeti, who worked at the world-renowned Boutiq' Bar in Budapest. He's highlighting wines from Southern Italy, Greece and Lebanon, along with a number of sparkling and Tiki cocktails. The bar, which seats 28, splits the space between the lounge area and the more formal dining area.

"We kind of wanted to capture a very convivial atmosphere," Tsolakis says. "The bar takes center stage. And Peter's very good on the art form of presenting cocktails. We want all eyes on the cocktails."

Any eyes wandering from the cocktails are likely to spot a number of handsome design and decor touches. Wine crates hang from the ceiling, and saucepans serve as sinks in the penny-tiled bathrooms. In a nod to history, some of the banquettes are made with wood from Anthony's Pier 4, which once drew crowds to the sparse waterfront. Now, with the neighborhood nearly filled out with towering buildings, the crew behind Committee wants the restaurant to be the destination spot for waterfront diners.

"There's a lot of chains with steak houses and seafood and Mexican. But we have a little niche, especially in this area, where we're food-focused," Tsolakis says. "We're offering a lot of flavor."

FARM TO FARM TABLE

JUST A SHORT WALK FROM THE FIELDS AT Land's Sake Farm in Weston, a huge tent covers two long, elegantly set tables. Nearby, chef Michael Scelfo of Alden & Harlow stands behind a massive grill and turns out a spectacular bill of fare, without the benefit of electricity and for the benefit of the farm. Dubbed the Solstice Dinner, it sold out quickly, as do all of the farm's Supper Club dinners.

Most of the dinners, featuring chefs such as Tiffani Faison, Mary Dumont, Andy Husbands and Joshua Smith, take place at the Josiah Smith Tavern in the town center. All of them, says executive director Ed Barker, help further the farm's mission: to grow "super-high-quality organic produce that's turned into super-high-quality food that people eat." And it's not only the most fortunate in Weston who are reaping the harvest of Land's Sake. The farm donated nearly 20,000 pounds of produce last year to organizations such as Rosie's Place, Community Servings and Lovin' Spoonfuls. The Council on Aging in Weston also arranges for seniors to receive $20 worth of produce for free every week. "It's a social experience," Barker says. "It brings people together for a reason."

More than 60 guests took part in that social experience at the Solstice Dinner, chowing down on veggie-centric dishes that were served family-style. Huge platters included farm greens tossed with spice-roasted strawberries, smoked almonds and buttermilk crème; spring vegetable panzanella with garlic-scape salsa verde and haloumi; grilled young potatoes and lemons with burnt spring onion oil, chicken skin crumble and bianco sardo crème; and the pièce de résistance, slow-roasted pork coppa with cherry vinaigrette, crispy quinoa salad and tatsoi. For dessert, there was warm berry buckle with ginger ice cream and smoked honeycomb. Mark your calendar for the next Supper Club, which features chef Louis DiBiccari of Tavern Road on July 16.

Good Eats: Hot to Trot

Sunny Boy is a new concept for BiNA Family Hospitality (which recently shuttered Merrill & Co.) and for Washington Square, where simple, solid breakfast and lunch fare has been missing. The cafe stands out by doing all of its baking in-house, and the most impressive product might be the whole-wheat sandwich loaf used in the turkey club. Thick-cut, soft and nutty, it's substantial enough to stand up to the filling (house-roasted turkey, thick-cut bacon, avocado spread) and reminds you how good fresh-baked sandwich bread can be. / Elizabeth Bomze

Jennifer Coolidge is perhaps best known for her role as über-cougar Stifler's Mom in the American Pie franchise, along with similarly outrageous roles including a ditzy manicurist with a heart of gold in Legolly Blonde, off-beat parts in Christopher Guest films and most recently, a recurring role on TV's 2 Broke Girls The Boston-born actress takes on a different kind of woman in the Nora Theatre Company's Saving Kitty, in which she stars as an ultra-liberal atheist New Yorker who's thrown for a loop when her daughter brings home an evangelical Christian educator. COOLIDGE UNCUT: For more from Jennifer Coolidge read the extended interview at improper.com

HOW DOES THEATER COMPARE TO ACTING IN FILM OR TV? Well, you can't go back and do it over again! I think that's the coolest thing, that it's live and you're in the moment, and anything can go wrong. It's very exciting. And each performance is really different, I always find. Especially if you're working with really good actors, it sort of becomes beyond what you could have imagined the show to be. The people you're onstage with come up with this amazing stuff, and then you can't help but react to it.

DO YOU FEEL A LOT MORE PRESSURE, KNOWING THAT THERE ARE NO SECOND TAKES? I don't know if I feel like it's more pressure, because I feel like all of the jobs are pressure! [Laughs.] When I'm on a movie I feel a lot of pressure, when I'm on the TV show I feel a lot of pressure—there's a lot of money at stake. When you shoot a TV show you know how much it costs per minute to make that show, and you feel it. I would have to say that theater is probably the most fun, though.

WHAT KIND OF RESEARCH DID YOU DO TO PREPARE FOR THIS ROLE? Research is such a funny word because this character was really someone I could relate to, for some reason. She's a woman who has a lot going on. I think she's very sad about a lot of things, and she's a busybody; she's in everyone's business. And she really just can't keep her mouth shut about anything—she says a lot of really inappropriate stuff. But I found her to be really likable. You have to fall in love with who you're playing, and then you have to just be that person through and through.

YOU DON'T HAVE CHILDREN, BUT IF YOU DID, AND YOU WERE FACED WITH A SIMILAR SITUATION, WHAT WOULD YOU DO? Well, I have an assistant. She's a young girl, 26 years old, and I'm very opinionated about who she should be with. It's just like she's my daughter. I'm kind of controlling about it. She recently started dating this guy who is kind of amazing, and I'm all excited about it. But if she wanted to leave this great guy for some creepy guy, believe me, I'd get my hands in it. I would be very involved, and that's probably not cool when you're a boss. But it's hard when you really like somebody! You want to save their ass before it's too late.

WHO'S ONE ACTOR YOU'D LOVE TO WORK WITH? I'll tell you who it is because it just happened to me. I just saw For from the Modding Crowd, and the lead actor, Matthias Schoenaerts, I want to do a movie where I have love scenes with that dude. He must be in his early 30s, and boy, is he my type. When I was watching that movie I was like, this is a real movie star. You can't take your eyes off of him. I was like, 'Wow, how do I get a job with that dude?'

Beauty Buzz: Scents of Purpose

Some might call me a skeptic, even a cynic. I'd say I'm a realist. Once, at more gullible—ahem, open-minded—friends' behest, I visited a psychic who told me I had the filthiest aura she'd ever seen and offered to clean it, for a fee. I politely declined. So, I had some preconceptions when I entered Cambridge's recently revamped Pyara Spa & Salon—a flagship of the Ayurveda-inspired Aveda brand—to embark on a Pure-Fume Sensory Journey, in which a trained salon pro would create a personal aroma meant to help cure what ails me, spiritually speaking. It included tarot-like cards representing the seven chakras (it turns out my Third Eye could use glasses), a stress-and-energy assessment and a blind scent test, conducted by massage therapist Kristina Pirroni. We settled on a spicy, earthy scent with hints of orange and geranium, which she bottled for me. (Scents can be incorporated in a massage or used in bath salts, fragrance or lotion.) Am I more spiritually balanced? Only time will tell—but I definitely smell a little fresher. / Alexandra Cavallo

TROPICAL TAKEOVER

For those not in the fruit loop: Pineapple's having a moment. It's a key motif at the Frogmore, the Fairsted Kitchen team's new Jamaica Plain restaurant focused on Lowcountry fare and slated to open later this summer. The Frogmore is using it as a nod to Southern hospitality—but the fruit has neighborhood roots that predate the restaurant.

A Roxbury Latin and Harvard grad, James Dole picked up his agricultural know-how at what is now the Arnold Arboretum before heading to Hawaii, where he was crowned the "pineapple king" as head of the Dole Pineapple Company. Drop by his family's Roanoke Avenue home on the JP Historical Society's July 4 and Aug. 22 Sumner Hill tours—or sample your way across town. How about them pineapples? / Sarah Hagman

1 The team at Stephanie's infuses vodka with pineapple for a week to bring a sweet-but-not-too-sweet taste of the tropics to their Doli martini

2 Pressed's Copper juice uses lemon, alkalized water, dandelion root and pineapple (which is packed with the drink's namesake element) Bonus: Get a taste of hot and cold with the pineapple habanero paleta.

3. Corona and a pineapple reduction with guajillo chiles and chiles de Arbol make a fine pair in Naco Taco's michelada which bar manager Kelly Cognac suggests pairing with a carne asada torta

4 Tempo mixes Ballast Point's Sculpin IPA with gin and lemon, then adds a touch of the Caribbean with pineapple juice and falernum, all served in a Tiki glass

MARKER MAGIC

A Sharpie isn't just a humble office supply in the hand of Ethan Murrow. Known for photorealistic yet slyly surreal drawings in graphite, ballpoint pen and, yep, the familiar marker, Murrow will fill the ICA's sprawling Sandra and Gerald Fineberg Art Wall with Seastead, a response to the museum's waterfront digs executed entirely in Sharpie. "The drawing deals with rising water levels and the massive building push that is ongoing throughout Boston," says the SMFA professor, who'll create Seastead in full view of ICA goers June 28-July 10. It's not the first time he's had an audience. "The toughest and best was at a museum in West Virginia, where huge school groups, mostly kindergartners, came in and peppered me with questions nonstop for hours." Not that Murrow minded the kids' "blunt, funny and tough" inquisition. "I'm interested in the spur-of-the-moment dialogue that crops up as people inquire about imagery and intentions," he explains. "I enjoy being put on the spot." / Jacqueline Houton

GETTING OFF THE ISLAND

THE LATEST IN A BEST-SELLING SERIES INVESTIGATES SOMETHING FISHY IN BOSTON HARBOR.

Robert B. Parker's Kickback* by Ace Atkins
Published by G.P. Putnam's Sons, 304 pages, $27

IT'S A COMFORT THAT THE DEPARTED ROBERT B. Parker's voice and characters have lived on with help from Ace Atkins, who's continued his Spenser series. Here, private eye Spenser has been induced to investigate the incarceration of juveniles on a Boston Harbor island. The crimes are minor, to put it mildly: One kid, Dillon, made naughty fun of his vice principal—setting up a fake Twitter profile and suggesting he gardens in the nude—and off he went, no lawyer involved.

In ominous italicized passages, we learn that this island juvie, despite platitudinous mission statements, is a place of horror and abuse. Spenser and his sidekick Hawk, a gun for hire with a casually sexy style, go after the slimy characters involved, including Boston judges and a developer, who get bucks galore for every slammered kid.

With ping-ponging repartee, Spenser and Hawk travel to Tampa to explore the Bostonians' thug connections. Violence and threats come at them, and they return the favor with nonchalant fearlessness. In Parker style, Atkins lets the breeze of good humor and some wiseguy sarcasm waft through even the most sinister situations. And with Susan the shrink, Spenser enjoys a dance of a romance full of gently mocking affection.

FROM PAGE 39: Felix Bukowski wasn't pleased to have a visitor. He looked to have had a long day at court, but the closer I got, it smelled as if he'd had a long day at the tavern. He was short and thick with an enormous head. He looked like one of those guys who needed everything custom made, from hats to pants. He looked to be a 28 inseam with a 38 waist. His hair was long and slick and matched his sparse grey beard. I couldn't tell if he was trying for the stubble look or just had forgotten to shave. ◆

A BIG SWING

MANY HITS BUT A FEW WHIFFS AT BATALI'S BOSTON DEBUT

BABBO PIZZERIA E ENOTECA
11 Fan Pier Blvd., Boston
(617-421-4466)
babbopizzeria.com

With its chain-heavy restaurant scene, the booming Seaport gets little love from food nerds. Aside from the often-middling food, we worry that vacuuming up customers and talented staff hurts worthier Boston independents. We greet New York-based celebrity chefs with a similar squint: Can those deep-pocketed food-TV names reproduce their Gotham magic here? I've enjoyed several NYC restaurants from the storied team of Mario Batali and Joe Bastianich and was particularly impressed by the affordability of their Otto Enoteca Pizzeria, which focuses on Italian small plates, pastas, thin-crust pizzas and affordable wines. So I approached the new Babbo Pizzeria e Enoteca, which despite the name is close to a clone of Manhattan's Otto, with more optimism.

The wide-open, rather loud room is appealing, with its long, comfortable bar, dual dining bars fronting open kitchens and tables with simple wooden furnishings. The meal starts with excellent, warm, hard-crusted bread and olive oil. A salad of escarole and sunchoke is simple, perfectly dressed and generously portioned for $8. It's easy to like the assortment of inexpensive small plates, starting with a superb cool salad of farro and corn topped with a large dollop of creamy stracciatella ($5). Cauliflower alla siciliana ($5) dotted with capers, as well as lentils Toscana ($5) featuring al dente green legumes and fatty pancetta, are both a trifle bland but deliver solid peasant comfort. But the fresh-from-the-fridge chill on eggplant caponata ($5) regrettably mutes its flavors; let it warm up for half an hour, and it's smashing. Meanwhile, peperonata ($5) is unimpeachable: a vivid dish of stewed sweet red peppers, tomatoes and onions. Small cold seafood plates show similar schizophrenia. Portuguese sardines ($7) atop a nest of frisée are of excellent quality, but the tariff seems a bit steep for three small fish. By contrast, baccalà mantecato ($7) is a plentiful mound of airy, smoothly whipped salt cod, potatoes, garlic, oil and cream, a delectable spread for the good bread.

The wood-fired chew, crust and char on the pizzas here are fantastic, but toppings don't always equal their foundation. Vongole pizza ($14) is gorgeously covered with more than a dozen perfect cockles still in their shells that burst with briny flavor, but brutal oversalting makes this pie almost inedible. Guanciale pizza ($14) offers better balance with cured pork jowl, parmigiano and scallions, but the egg at its center is overcooked, denying us the pleasure of smearing its yolk around.

Salumi ($9 each, $25 for all five) and formaggio ($11 for three, $15 for five, $19 for seven) are of fine quality, served at the proper temperatures and fairly priced; one could easily make a lovely meal of these. Frittelle con prosciutto ($8) is a tasty bargain: a pile of crunchy-crusted, globular fritters of escarole, bread, milk and dry-cured ham. The oven finishes the similarly terrific polpette ($13), meatballs of pork shoulder and brisket in Sunday sugo, a bright, chunky tomato sauce, but I encountered a small, sharp bone in one meatball. The seesaw soars upward with dazzling grilled razor clams ($18), another heaping portion of flawless specimens showered with garlic, lemon and basil.

Pastas are also a puzzling mixed bag. Spaghetti carbonara ($10), sauced with the canonical pancetta, scallions, black pepper and egg yolk, is amazing, all about the yolk. Then comes rigatoni cacio e pepe ($10), the quintessentially simple Roman dish dressed only with great pecorino and lots of black pepper. The kitchen miscalculates badly by subbing heavy rigatoni for light, underdone spaghetti, but its greater sin is another overdose of salt. At the other end of the pendulum's swing is linguine with Maine crab ($15) with jalapeños and lemon breadcrumbs: beautiful, balanced, wonderful.

Desserts are another roll of the dice. Baba al limoncello ($10) has the elements of a great creamy citrus dessert, with excellent fior di latte gelato and bracing lemon cream, but its muffin-like cake is too dry. Opt for olive oil coppetta ($10), and you'll get a pretty little sundae of olive oil gelato, lime curd, strawberry granita, pignoli brittle and basil syrup: an eye-catching assortment of flavors and textures. As in New York, a deep list of exclusively Italian wines by the glass, quartino and bottle is thoughtful and fairly priced. The skilled and hustling barstaff knows its proper cocktails and pours an outstanding, 18-deep selection of Italian amari—including Cappelletti L'Elisir Novasalus ($7), a palate-whacking, pine-tarry, black digestivo that makes Fernet-Branca seem wimpy—in proper chimney glasses. The cheery waitstaff exhibits decent wine knowledge and admirable mastery of the long menu; one wonders if frequent expressions of awe at their legendary long-distance bosses are part of the training.

In the end, Babbo Pizzeria is slightly confounding in its unevenness. When it's good, it's delightful, and invariably ends with a surprisingly modest check, especially given the expected premiums for its marquee chef's fame and touristy location. But given the pedigree, the number of menu landmines and kitchen miscues is disconcerting. Order carefully, and you can say (with too-faint praise, given the competition) that it's the best reason to dine and drink in the Seaport. Hit enough of those potholes, though, and you may wonder why there's so much fuss about the increasingly ubiquitous Mario and Joe. ◆

Q: I HAVE FINE VERTICAL LINES, LIKE "PUCKER LINES" AROUND MY UPPER LIP AND MY LIPSTICK MIGRATES INTO THEM; YUCK. WHEN I LOOK AT PICTURES OF MYSELF IT'S ALL I SEE.

A: Don't worry; there are two fillers that are great for those lines above your lip: Restylane Silk and Beletero. These dermal fillers are less dense than other alternatives, allowing for them to be injected directly into those lines, filling them in a very natural-looking manner. If your lips are thin or also need some plumping up, a filler such as Juverderm may be used to add more volume.

These fillers are composed of hyaluronic acid, a clear gel that is soft and pliable. Hyaluronic acid is a compound found naturally in our body so it is extremely safe. Lip injections actually don't hurt due to the fact that lidocaine, a numbing agent, is mixed into the syringe.

Your lips will look totally natural and the only person who will know you have had filler is you! The key to a great result is to take a conservative approach, don't over do it, and select a well-trained clinician with lots of experience injecting lips.

INFINITELY POLAR BEAR ★★★
Starring Mark Ruffalo, Zoe Saldana, Imogene Wolodarsky, Ashley Aufderheide, Beth Dixon and Keir Dullea. Written and directed by Maya Forbes. At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

Movies / Brett Michel

MARK RUFFALO BRINGS HIS TALENTS TO BEAR AS A BIPOLAR DAD.

Maya Forbes, a television writer/producer who branched out onto the big screen by co-authoring the screenplays for Monsters vs. Aliens and Diary of a Wimpy Kid: Dog Days, has tackled a deeply personal story for her debut as writer/director, Infinitely Polar Bear, which takes its title from a response her father once wrote on a hospital admission form asking for a diagnosis of his condition.

Drawing from her experience growing up in Cambridge as the older of two biracial sisters—the children of a bipolar Boston Brahmin and his long-suffering African-American wife—Forbes centers the film on Amelia Stuart, her surrogate in this quasi-autobiographical drama. She's wonderfully played by a first-time actress, 11-year-old Imogene Wolodarsky, who just happens to be Forbes' talented daughter. Obviously, the apple doesn't fall far from the tree.

During a moment alone with her mother, Maggie (Zoe Saldana, who charms despite limited screen time), Amelia says, "I don't think I'm black. I look white." And compared to Faith (novice Ashley Aufderheide, another natural), her younger sister who more closely resembles their mother, the light-skinned, straight-haired girl has a point. The conversation that follows shows her wrestling with an outside world that's telling her in myriad ways that her race matters; so is Maggie, who faces difficulty as a black woman trying to find a corporate job in Boston during the late '70s.

Maggie already has her hands full worrying about providing a future for her daughters when her husband Cam (Mark Ruffalo, delivering great work in a tricky role) experiences a mental breakdown in the film's opening scene, manically running about the family's suburban front yard, barely covered in a Speedo. The couple first met in 1967 while they were both working at WGBH, and at the time, Maggie saw nothing terribly unusual in his idiosyncrasies; it was the late '60s, and odd behavior was an acceptable norm. But a decade later, with Cam unable to hold down a job, Maggie's affection for him pales in comparison to her fear for their family's survival.

This deeply flawed man emerges as a positive influence on his girls, who remain grateful for who they are...

After Cam is hospitalized, Maggie brings their daughters to visit him. Heavily medicated, he lumbers toward them, with Faith noting how he's grown fat from the Lithium. While he briefly perks up, the drugs have turned him into a shell of the man they love. Nevertheless, this is Cam's—and Ruffalo's—film, and the episodic structure Forbes weaves through a handful of seasons serves as an affectionate tribute to the ups and downs of her own troubled but loving father, who died in 1998.

While Cam recovers in a halfway house, the cash-strapped Maggie is forced to move the family into a small apartment. (With art imitating life, the film's limited budget required Providence to stand in—beautifully—for the Cambridge of old.) In an effort to avoid poverty, Maggie decides to get her MBA, with an eye toward attending Harvard. Alas, it's Columbia that accepts her into an 18-month program, so she hatches a plan that Cam's overprotective, blue-blood parents (Beth Dixon and Keir Dullea) wildly disagree with. But then, they're reluctant to provide more than a minimum of financial support for their broke and broken son.

Maggie proposes she spend weekdays studying in Manhattan, with return trips to the Bay State on weekends—if Cam agrees to move into her apartment with his daughters, taking on the responsibility of feeding them (he's a fantastic cook), clothing them (he sews a phenomenal flamenco dress for Faith) and transporting them to and from public school. In other words, Cam must be a father. Of course, his capricious nature forces Amelia and Faith into much of the parenting as he alternately goes off his meds and resumes drinking. But throughout these frequently funny (and sometimes frightening) episodes, this deeply flawed man emerges as a positive influence on his girls, who remain grateful for who they are and what they have.

And while Maggie eventually graduates, the sad fact is her Boston employment opportunities are still limited as a woman of color—and the ugly busing crisis from earlier in the decade remains close in the rearview mirror. Frustrated, she sums up the residual racism her husband fails to see, pointedly telling him: "When white people live in squalor, you're eccentric; when black people live in squalor, believe me, no one's charmed."

Thankfully, nothing's ever quite so black-and-white in Infinitely Polar Bear, which treats issues of race, mental illness and family dysfunction with nuance. Forbes understands that children are resilient; as she reminds us with her heartfelt family remembrance, it's possible to emerge from painful experiences not only stronger, but also smiling. ◆

FLIGHT PATH

CHRIS ROBINSON FOLLOWS PSYCHEDELIC TRAILS IN HIS OWN BAND.

THE CHRIS ROBINSON BROTHERHOOD happily continues in the tradition of another classic band—and not its namesake frontman's old outfit the Black Crowes.

"We're propagating the seed of the Grateful Dead," Chris Robinson said from his California home base last month, when he was looking forward to catching the first "Fare Thee Well" shows by the Dead's surviving members in Santa Clara on June 27-28.

"Maybe we'll busk in the parking lot," said the Georgia native, 48, who has played in Dead bassist Phil Lesh's own group, as have other members of the CRB. "This band is unashamedly born and bred in California. That's what we came looking for, and by God, that's what we got ... we wanted those kinds of stories and spaces."

Those "Fare Thee Well" shows (with Phish guitarist Trey Anastasio filling in for the late Jerry Garcia) are the summer's hottest stadium ticket, rounded out by a Chicago swan song on July Fourth weekend, and Robinson embraces the hype. "You're talking two generations of people who never got to see Jerry," he said. "And being the last time, it's a celebration for everybody who's been a part of the culture, whether it was '69, '79, '89, whatever. That's kind of the vibe, and good for them."

Particularly for people who can't make that trip west, similar vibes will flow when the CRB plays what he calls its "cosmic California rock 'n' roll" at the Levitate Festival in Marshfield on July 11 and Lowell's Boarding House Park on July 17.

In the past four years, and over three albums and two live volumes of Betty's Blends (by Dead engineer Betty Cantor-Jackson), the CRB has hatched originals that blend roots and psychedelia, from the soulful ballad "Wanderer's Lament" to "Vibration & Light Suite," which devolves into a space jam.

"We're architects of the song," Robinson said, adding, "With great architecture, we can have great moments of inspiration, which would be places to improvise."

Co-guitarist Neal Casal, who also plays in Hard Working Americans and uncoils sweet Garcia-esque tendrils, serves as Robinson's leading foil.

"With great architecture, we can have great moments of inspiration, which would be places to improvise."

But keyboardist Adam Macdougall, who came from the Crowes with Robinson, provides other textures, from jazzy piano to Krautrock-like synth colors.

The CRB also plays covers spanning Bob Dylan, the Rolling Stones, the Dead and even the Crowes. Robinson's keen on '50s tunes, too. "In a weird way, [we're] spreading the word," he said. "You might have forgotten about the song or not known who Bobby Mitchell was, and you grab those records. That's how I learned about music."

Indeed, growing up outside Atlanta with a dad who was a major-label folksinger, Robinson listened to Jimmy Reed, Mose Allison and the Stanley Brothers, then funk, R&B and punk, Dylan and the Byrds, R.E.M. and the Dream Syndicate.

"Most people get into bands, I guess, because they want to be rock stars," he said. "The main motivation for me was to get everyone together, and writing songs when I was underage and I wanted to see the Replacements or whatever."

It's been 25 years since Robinson nonetheless became that rock star, when the Black Crowes released their debut, Shake Your Money Maker, and the singer and his guitarist brother Rich forged a rocky but successful partnership that's apparently met its final impasse. In January, Rich Robinson said that the Crowes were done because he could not agree to his brother's unequal contract terms.

"I feel bad that my brother felt like he had to lash out like that, but it kind of makes it an easy decision," the singer said, adding of the Crowes' last reunion in 2013, "I felt that was my last contractual obligation to that organization. I always felt—whether family or not—that business, those things aren't for public consumption. So I still have nothing to say except that it's sad."

Robinson thinks his future—and joy—lies with the CRB. "We've rid ourselves of any things that we feel are negative energy," he said. "Just keep tending the musical garden, and we'll keep reaping the benefits. At least that's our mantra around here." ◆

PERISCOPE UP

WE'RE DOING IT LIVE!

I WAS ON MYSPACE. I'M ON FACEBOOK. I SIGNED up for Twitter. But after that I instituted a moratorium on new social media. If you embraced every social media platform, eventually they'd consume your life. Your Instagram would show you pinning away on Pinterest, while your Tumblr would be mostly about Snapchat (or vice-versa!). I did join Vine, but only so I could post a video of a guy in Southie riding a wheelchair down a hill during a blizzard. The takeaway from all this, of course, is that you should definitely follow Gisele on Instagram.

And anyway, I don't do much with the social media that I already have. The other day I thought about tweeting, "I am NOT in favor of sex offender registries. It's bad enough that they're sex offenders, and now they want us to buy them gifts?" If you want to use that, go ahead, because I never bothered to post it. That's my social media strategy: I think, "I should post that," and then don't. I'll bet Gilbert Gottfried wishes he'd taken that approach.

I figured I was set in my social media ways, but then my friend Neil called to tell me about his new show. Neil's a TV producer in LA, so I'm accustomed to hearing about new projects. But in this case, he prefaced the conversation with the question, "Do you know what Periscope is?" I took a moment to consider whether I did, and I quickly concluded that Neil was probably not broadcasting from a submarine. I copped to my ignorance.

"It's like Skype or FaceTime, except you're broadcasting to an audience," Neil explained. "Most people are like 'Here I am walking my dog,' and it's pretty amateur. So I created an actual show that I do every day, where I have guests and we take calls from people who want to pitch TV ideas. I have 5,000 followers, which is huge for Periscope right now." So Neil created a show where people give him ideas for a show. Brilliant.

I downloaded the app, and the next night my phone chirped when Neil went live. Almost immediately, the screen lit up with a scroll of comments. Some of the pitches were good, some were dumb and some were obvious goofs. "A show where dwarves ride dogs like they're horses?" Neil said, "I don't think I can sell that, but thanks. A show about a serial killer who finds his victims on Periscope... Uh, OK." Perhaps the most salient comment read, "This is the show right here."

I started checking out some of the other feeds, and Neil was right—it's amateur hour. But there's something fascinating about beaming into someone else's life, even when the moment in question is completely anodyne. I clicked on a feed entitled "I am about to board my flight from Frankfurt to San Francisco," and watched a German guy get in line at the airport. I wondered what the other passengers thought about him holding his phone up and narrating the experience. They seemed to be ignoring him, but they probably figured he was actually on the phone with someone. Once Periscope gets big, I have to think there'll be a backlash against phone-wielding narcissists treating the general public like extras in their personal reality shows. That said, I was strangely enthralled—along with 125 other viewers, some of whom offered tips on what to do in San Francisco.

A few days later, I decided to try a broadcast myself. I was driving my Bronco on a stretch of empty highway, bored senseless, so I turned on the app. Periscoping while driving: Obviously not a great idea, but I wasn't texting or responding to anyone. Almost immediately, I had six people doing a virtual ride-along. "Is that a Bronco?" someone asked. "No, it's an Avalanche," someone else replied. I wanted to shout "No, it's not!" but I chose not to breach the fourth wall.

Who were these people? And why did they care about an activity that I barely cared about myself? There's something about a live broadcast, the element of spontaneity and shared experience, that draws you in. I'd never go on YouTube to watch a video of someone walking down the street, but parachuting in as it's actually happening is somehow different.

I mean, where else can you interact with car mechanics in Turkey as they work on a pink Honda Civic? I joined 966 people in watching the Backstreet Boys go duty-free shopping in some airport. Who will be the first athlete or politician to "accidentally" broadcast a live tour down his pants? There are so many possibilities. Right now it's early, and we don't know whether Periscope will end up in the MySpace junkyard or replace TV as we know it. All I know is that I'm definitely following Gisele. ◆

Soroff On / Téa Leoni

DOWN TO A TÉA

THE ACTRESS REFLECTS ON HIDDEN TALENTS, HER 'ALIEN' DAUGHTER AND PLAYING POLITICS.

ACTRESS TÉA LEONI, 49, CURRENTLY PLAYS THE U.S. secretary of state in the CBS drama Madam Secretary. Born and raised in New York (where her grandmother was the founder and director of UNICEF), she has spent summers throughout her life at her family's Bay State home, and her extensive ties to this area include a great-grandfather who played in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the early '90s, she had her first starring role in a TV series on the Fox sitcom Flying Blind, and she went on to star in the ABC and NBC comedy The Naked Truth. Her film roles have included Deep Impact, Spanglish and Fun with Dick and Jane. Divorced from actor David Duchovny, with whom she has two children, she currently lives in New York.

JONATHAN SOROFF: What's one thing you wish you could do but can't?
TÉA LEONI: Breathe underwater. Duh.

Hidden talent? I can blow spit bubbles. And I have to just admit that the thing I really wish I could do is taxi whistle. I can't do it. I can cough up a loogie. I can burp an anthem. But I can't taxi whistle. I'm so discouraged by what an absolute spaz I am.

Surprising for a native New Yorker. I know! I'm out there with tourists, waving my hands. It's just awful.

One thing you would tell John Kerry or Hillary Clinton? There are so many things. What a best-kept secret secretary of state is! I wouldn't want to be president if I had been secretary of state first. That's the cool job. It would be such a letdown to go from there to the White House. I've really come to appreciate the importance of the State Department. This is the real deal. This is the grown-ups' table.

Anything you've learned or borrowed from a real secretary of state? No. In the beginning, there was so much chitter-chatter about my being Hillary. Most flattering of all, Fox News accused me of trying to get her elected. So then I questioned myself, thinking, "Do I need to dye my hair brown to get out of this? Or should I start donning really fabulous brooches? Play it that way? Or do I go full-on and get a perm, slick it back and go for Kissinger—throw 'em all for a loop?"

You could always do Madeleine Albright. It's funny. She's been fantastic. I'm actually speaking to her today. She's the one who introduced me to the very simple concept of how cool this job is. Just laying it out about what you're up to in this seat. So that's really the one thing I've been toying with in this role—her handle on her ego. Of all the positions in our government, that's the one where you can say, "I'm gonna grab the scepter and the crown and go parade myself around the planet." You can exploit an incredible arrogance if you're not as poised as someone like her. That's the thing I didn't know before about all those people—Hillary Clinton, John Kerry, Condoleezza Rice, Madeleine Albright—how in-check they kept themselves throughout, because it's a tremendous amount of power.

"I wouldn't want to be president if I had been secretary of state first. That's the cool job. It would be such a letdown."

So how many email accounts do you have on your personal device? [Laughs.] I just found the on button to my Mac, and right now, I'm sitting here with a phone the size of a dinner plate—thing is just so huge. More often than not, if you email me, you'll get an auto-response that says, "I'm either fishing or lying. Either way, I'm not getting back to you." I think all of this technology is a crushing blow to humanity.

Foreign policy initiative you'd pursue if you actually were secretary of state? The draft. I'd bring it back.

What president would you serve under if you could pick any? Oh, God ... I would have loved to put a little spark under Jimmy Carter. And if it were to be, I think it would be great to make history with Hillary.

Would you consider your life more comedy or drama? Oh, gee. I haven't ever stopped laughing. I'd say comedy. Even when it's been drama, I never lost my sense of humor.

Funniest thing you've read about yourself in a tabloid? That my daughter is an alien. That was shocking to me. I think it was because of David's somewhat intimate affiliation with brothers from another planet on The X-Files. I guess they were meaning to impregnate Gillian Anderson, but somehow I got in the way. Of course, I cut the story out and pasted it in my daughter's baby album.

Favorite thing about New England? You're not going to believe it, but first and foremost it's the weather. I love New England weather—hurricanes, feet of snow. I love the history. I love everything about it. There's no bullshit. The only part that didn't work for me is that they don't have any studios up there.

Jurassic Park III*—unfairly overlooked by the Academy? I think so. It's some of my best work, for sure. If you could get your hands on the outtake reel for that movie, it's hilarious. All that screaming, as soon as they yell, "Cut," just dissolves into hysterics. I gained 70 pounds when I had my daughter. David said it was like being married to a science experiment. So when I started that movie, I still had about 30 pounds on me, and filming took place over like nine months, during which I lost it. So in one take, I ran into the jungle weighing 150 pounds, and literally eight seconds later I ran out at a crisp 113. I never laughed so hard. Needless to say, they didn't use that shot.

Should we start making bumper stickers that say "Téa Leoni 2016"? I wish you would. I tried to get my dad to do it, and he won't. But there was a time I tried to put my name on the ballot for mayor of Revere. I was living there, and my platform was to be sure planes didn't take off from Logan before 7 am or after 9 pm. ◆

Boston's Best

"Best" is a small word that makes a big elaim. How do we decide on the top pop-up restaurant, theater troupe or purveyor of party dresses in a town with so many excellent options? We start by gathering a panel of judges of intimidating talent and diverse expertise: aeademics and artists, fashion and media mavens, kitchen and bar stars, nonprofit pros and entrepreneurs (ineluding one, we discovered mid-cocktail, who passionately blogs about elub sandwiches on the side—hence that new award category). Taking over the seeond floor of Post 390 on a fine spring night, we sipped, supped, table-hopped and, most importantly, fiercely debated. From there, we tabulated their ballots, added nominations from staff, contributors and readers like you, and got to work vetting the finalists—the doughnut category alone probably added 10 pounds to the editorial team. Tough work, but someone's got to do it.

The end result features standouts old and new, from a bar that's been welcoming patrons for centuries to a haberdashery that's been open just a few months. There are booming businesses that are expanding their local empires along with tiny indie that work magie in a few hundred square feet. And there are both hidden gems and familiar favorites that may have made the eut for unexpected (you knew the bivalves were top-notch at Row 34, but what about that beer program?) helped make our 24th annual Boston the best yet—and, we hope, your field guide for urban adventuring in the year ahead.

BAGELSAURUS

There's a reason Bagelsaurus draws long lines. The Porter Square shop's bagels boast crisp exteriors, satisfying chew, a bubbly crumb and complex tang—a rare profile that owner Mary Ting Hyatt achieves using a well-nurtured sourdough starter, slow cold fermentation and precise shaping. The results are hands-down the best bagels in the city and, dare we say, in all of New England. Don't miss the killer pretzel version topped with mustard butter.

PHO VIET'S

When seeking this essential Vietnamese street-food sandwich—baguette, fresh herbs, crunchy pickled daikon and carrots, Asian mayo and/or fish sauce-based dressing, fresh chilies and/or Sriracha and a protein of your choice—you'll note that Dorchester has numerous quality purveyors. But this food-court stall adjacent to the Allston Hong Kong Supermarket gets our nod for its superb crackly-crusted bread and abundant fillings. There's no better $4 lunch in town. Get there before late afternoon, when they frequently sell out for the day.

Barbecue

BLUE RIBBON BBQ

City slickers agree: For down-home barbecue near Boston, Blue Ribbon serves the prize pig. And beef brisket. And pulled chicken. Twenty years after first firing up the smoker, this Newton/Arlington duo offers highest-quality barbecue in lo-fi environs, drawing downtown diners and hot sauce-worshipping suburbanites alike. Plus, those party platters and quarts have saved our gameday parties on many occasions. File under: BBQ MVP.

Bartender

RAN DUAN OF THE BALDWIN BAR AT SICHUAN GARDEN II

Seventeen years after the B-Side Lounge birthed the local craft cocktail revival, Boston is blessed with scores of skilled, scholarly, engaging bartenders making serious drinks. How remarkable then that our most blazing talent is self-taught and works out of his family's excellent Sichuan restaurant in, ahem, Woburn. With a self-effacing mien that never hints at his armful of international accolades, Duan embodies nonpareil originality. Get a designated driver, head to the Baldwin and start by tasting his fascinating updates on classic Tiki drinks. Ran's a winner.

SWEET CHEEKS

Sweet mercy. While some barbecue joints treat their Southern-inflected side dishes as afterthoughts, Top Chef alum Tiffani Faison has drawn national notice with her basket o' biscuits: flaky, oversized accompaniments served with a creamy dollop of sweet honey butter. That pulled pork is spectacular, but these are the real attention hogs. (At least until her new Southeast Asian-inspired eatery, Tiger Mama, opens with a roar next door.)

Bread

CLEAR FLOUR BREAD

If there's a problem at this brilliant bakery located on a quiet Brookline side street, it's the surfeit of options. How to choose among superb, crusty ancienne French baguettes, category-defining German rye, fine-crumbed pain de mie and fantastic croissants? And that's even before you consider sweeter options like a honeyed loaf of Paris Night bread or sticky morning buns. Best to go back often, embrace the plenitude, experiment with something novel each time and pity those carb-counters.

Breakfast

SOUTH END BUTTERY

This local bakery/cafe is a constant hive of activity, drawing daily crowds with its excellent coffee, pastries, salads and sandwiches. But it's never more attractive than at breakfast, when its sunny corner location makes an eminently comfy spot for a breakfast burrito, smoked salmon on a bagel with proper accoutrements, or a granola-crunchy, fruit-laden yogurt parfait. If you don't have a dog to take to Peters Park, this is the best place in the neighborhood to get to know South Enders of every sort.

Brunch

THE SINCLAIR

Closure, noun: The satisfaction achieved by brunching at the same spot that gave you a hangover. (That's the official definition. Promise.) Every weekend, this restaurant-slash-rock hall brings body-thrashing fun times at night—and healing come the morning after, thanks to new chef Keenan Langlois' breakfast tacos, waffle bar and other heavenly eats. Perk up those bleary eyes on the sunny patio, or sip a mimosa flight or boozy coffee at the recently added upstairs Club Car bar.

Chinese

BEST LITTLE RESTAURANT

Tucked into an easy-to-overlook Chinatown basement, Best Little serves traditional Cantonese and Teochew dishes at ridiculous bargain prices. Its simplicity, freshness and ringing clarity of flavors will seduce the most timid American accustomed to falling back on General Gau's. Bring a friend or two and start with minced beef soup with Chinese parsley, then salty pork with green beans and a lettuce-wrap dish that will make you regret ever stepping inside a P.F. Chang's. You'll be back, and soon.

DRINK

Nowadays, every new restaurant thumps its chest with a signature burger, each patty permutation wilder than the last. But the best is an unlisted offering at Barbara Lynch's well-established Fort Point cocktail bar. Available by request only in limited nightly quantities, Drink's burger is simple yet spectacular: a half-pound of beef from a southern Colorado farm, American cheese, housemade pickles and black-pepper aioli on a potato roll topped with sesame seeds. Crazy good.

Club Sandwich

HENRIETTA'S TABLE

It's a lunchtime staple—but even done well, a club sandwich can be the menu's beige paint: a nondescript background element amid more eye-catching offerings. Luckily, Henrietta's doesn't do the sandwich well; it does it spectacularly. Toasted challah bookends bacon, lettuce, tomato, lemon-chive mayo and the best bird in Harvard Square: rotisserie-roasted chicken crusted with seven herbs and a maple-horseradish mustard. (Got all that?) This is the VIP club experience.

Once upon a time, simply saying "venti" was enough to make one feel oh-so-informed on coffee. Now, like wine aficionados, java junkies appreciate true complexity—the infinite symphonies of flavor notes, the nuanced impact of a bean's terroir. This Berkshires-based roaster gets everything very right, from its diverse varieties of farm-direct beans for take-home brewing to its two Boston cafes serving impeccably prepared pour-overs.

LIQUID ART HOUSE

We eat art at this restaurant/gallery hybrid, where pastry chef Giselle Miller does amazing things with a plate as her canvas. Her creative techniques (say, using a Cryovac to aerate ingredients) result in elegantly presented grand finales like the coconut semifreddo, with its shaved "snow" and foams of dehydrated chartreuse, and the Bird's Nest: fabulous phyllo dough cradling compressed apricots in honey with a stout beer parfait. From inspiration to execution, these are absolute masterpieces.

Deli

MOODY'S DELICATESSEN & PROVISIONS

Greater Boston finally got a deli that merits a trip, a Waltham storefront that makes its astonishing, globe-trotting assortment of charcuterie, salumi and sausages from local animals, serving them in a bright combination of densely packed retail wonderland and counter-service sandwich joint. Come for a transporting pastrami or corned beef sandwich; leave with a sackful of meats for your next picnic or barbecue. The time and craft required to make these products ain't cheap, but they're resoundingly worth the tariff.

WINSOR DIM SUM CAFE

When most folks hear dim sum, they think of those frenetic, large-scale places where trolleys are wheeled about, and sitting in the wrong corner can mean long delays between the kitchen and your chopsticks. Skip that noise at this small Chinatown room, where customers order a la carte and get their little baskets and plates of delectable dumplings, pancakes and buns fast and piping hot. With its handy picture menu, even newbies can order fearlessly. It's a saner, fresher path to the delights of dim sum

Diner

MIKE'S CITY DINER

We've all met Mike's. We're usually in last night's clothes, but there he is: a reliable reminder of the pre-preppy South End, bleeding local color while salving wounded weekend warriors with big, cheap spreads of great greasy-spoon grub and service that's stern yet nurturing. (Like when mom rolled her eyes at your high-school hangover while pouring you coffee.) Don't ever change, Mike's. Because Monday vows aside, we won't.

BLACKBIRD DOUGHNUTS

Between pop-ups and dedicated dessert purveyors, doughnuts are having a moment. And fans are already flocking to this just-hatched concept from the team behind the Gallows, which serves fresh-baked treats in a rotating smorgasbord of sweet and savory flavors: Blackberry lavender and lemon coconut have shared menu space with pepperoni pizza and sesame Sriracha. Quirky? Yes. But each inventive new offering (washed down with custom-blend Fazenda coffee) is another fine feather in Blackbird's cap.

SHEHERAZAD

If you equate Middle Eastern cuisine with falafel and shawarma, get yourself some lunch from the Sheherazad truck. Hamersley's alum Burke Weston and his team specialize in the kind of simple, hearty Iraqi street food that you can't get anywhere else in the Hub, like crispy feta-stuffed borek, Lebanese pita wrapped around fried cauliflower, and orange blossom-scented roast lamb. In an era where food-truck fleets swell ranks while fine-dining establishments shutter, it's nice to see some classics soldier on strong as ever. In its fourth decade, L'Espalier's white-tablecloth elegance still enchants, and chef Frank McClelland's modern French plates, fresh and flavorful with many ingredients culled from his own Apple Street Farm, remain fanfare-filled events—more than mere "dinners"—best enjoyed through his degustation and tasting journeys. Gluten-Free

MYERS + CHANG

This casually hip South End pan-Asian eatery was doing gluten-free years before it was cool, back when only genuinely gluten-intolerant diners cared and scant few places could accommodate their deadly serious dietary restriction. M + C not only makes it easy to go GF with a clearly labeled menu, but offers more than a dozen options nightly, including terrific plates like nasi goreng, Thai ginger chicken salad and pretty fish dishes. Gluten-free rarely looks or tastes this good: You can be forgiven for faking your aversion here.

Mexican

ANGELA'S CAFE

On a quiet Eastie side street, septuagenarian grandmother Angela Atenco Lopez dresses chicken and pork with moles, adobos and pipians, the incredible complex sauces of her native Puebla. Her simpler plates of tacos (including the little-seen Lebanese-Mexican tacos arabes), sublime soups like pozole and surprisingly luxe-tasting entrees like chiles rellenos (cheese-stuffed, batter-fried peppers) also make this charming, modest spot a Mecca for Bostonians seeking traditional, lovingly prepared versions of one of Mexico's most highly regarded regional cuisines.

Pies

PETSI PIES

Renee "Petsi" McLeod has been baking pies for adoring crowds for more than 20 years. Her dominion has expanded beyond her original Somerville bakery and the dessert menu at Inman Square's Tupelo restaurant to include two Cambridge cafes. Partisans may debate whether her sweet pies (like never-cloying versions of brown-butter pecan pie and banana cream pie) are better than her savory pies (like her costly but incomparable chicken pot pie). Nobody argues that they aren't all awe-inspiring.

RIVER BAR

Great dining and drinking at the mall? You heard right. This 38-seat glass box at Assembly Row emphasizes a strong beverage program buttressed by clever, Asian-accented dishes from chef Patrick Gilmartin, like a kicky grass-fed burger that includes a layer of skinny bacon spring rolls. Most amazing is its wraparound 123-seat patio with a lovely view of the Mystic River and fire pits that make it welcoming even in chilly weather. Bonus: The new Orange Line stop nearby makes it a snap to visit.

Pizza

A4 PIZZA

As you'd expect, the pies at this pizza-focused Somerville sib to Cambridge fave Area Four are killer, with a 12-year-old starter giving rise to dough that's fermented for three days, finished in a custom wood-fired oven and heaped with toothsome toppings, like the soppressata, sausage and bacon of the aptly named Carnivore. But the vibe is equally appetizing, thanks to free-flowing craft beer, music trivia nights, vintage video games and Hoodsie ice cream cups. Did we mention the half-priced slices after 11 pm? It's our Platonic ideal of a pizza parlor.

New Restaurant

TOWNSMAN

Homecoming king Matt Jennings shuttered Providence's fabled Farmstead Inc. to open this newcomer in his native Hub, and we couldn't be happier to have him back. The Cochon 555 triple-victor's nose-to-tail know-how informs glorious terrines and tiered plateaus heaped with charcuterie and local shellfish. And the country-chic dining room, all Windsor chairs and black-walnut tables, complements not-too-haute, not-too-heavy New American mains of exquisite meats and farm-fresh veggies. Bonus: Menton and Citizen Public House alums helm service and cocktails, respectively.

MENTON

Dining at Menton is like reaching the summit of Mount Everest: a peak experience (highest-end of the high-end Barbara Lynch empire) with some harsh conditions (one wine-paired tasting menu sets you back $300)—but if you (and your wallet) can survive, it's an unforgettable experience you'll treasure forever. And we love that Menton launched a playful Hot Dogs & Champagne summer pop-up series, bringing a taste of the high life to down-to-earth budgets.

Have You Seen What's Happening Downtown?

In the heart of Downtown Boston—Downtown Crossing, the Ladder District, and parts of the Financial and Theater Districts—amazing changes are transforming this historic neighborhood. Major international brands, such as the new PAUL bakery and Ogawa coffeehouse, are giving the area a more cosmopolitan flavor. At the majestic Burnham Building, a Roche Bros. supermarket just opened, with a PRIMARK department store set to debut in September, accompanying the GAP Factory Store that launched this spring. World-class restaurants, such as Serafina, continue to debut, joining over ninety other dining options. The boutique Godfrey Hotel arrives in October, complementing the six hotels already in service.

With over 150 jewelers in New England's premier Jewelry District, several beautifully restored theaters, superb public transit access, ample parking, and the legendary red-brick Freedom Trail winding through its center, downtown's amenities and attractions are endless. And there's great new programming, from the Redcoats Are Coming! performances on Summer Street Plaza, the Berklee College Summer In The City shows at 100 Summer Street Plaza, and the Platform Events: Boston Fashion Week 2015 showcase at the end of September.

AKINTO

Though it billed itself as a speakeasy-style cocktail lounge when opening, Wink & Nod has surprised and delighted us with its inventive culinary incubator program: Every six months, the kitchen hosts a different pop-up. Now playing with its food is Akinto, a winning Southeast Asian-inspired concept (think mini banh mi and bao buns) steered by Philippines-born chef Patrick Enage under Boston Nightlife Ventures' new chief culinary officer, City Landing alum Bill Brodsky.

Power Dining

THE BRISTOL

Suggesting lunch here is an alpha move. The Four Seasons' storied restaurant has a pedigree that commands attention and a crowd that moves and shakes, whether they're brokering deals in intimate nooks by the newly refurbished bar or holding court at a table by the floor-to-ceiling windows overlooking the Public Garden. Years after those first martinis were poured and famous bar burgers served, the Bristol still wields commanding influence.

LE SALON DU MISTRAL

Devotees who flock to Mistral for grilled pizzas, refined French plates and knockout brunch (warm cinnamon buns, anyone?) may not realize that the bistro also boasts one of the prettiest private rooms in town. Adorned with Provençal pottery, topiary spheres and a wall of wine that speaks to the stellar list, Le Salon has its own bar, a fireplace and seating for up to 60 guests, who can dine on the likes of seared foie gras toasts, lobster bisque with cognac, roasted sirloin au poivre and handmade chocolate truffles. But it's the team's attention to detail and commitment to customization that really puts the special in special occasion.

Ramen

YUME WO KATARE

Boston's quality ramen options have expanded admirably in the past few years, but this tiny Porter Square storefront, with only 18 seats between its counter and two tables, has an inimitable charm. Its lone specialty, jiro ramen, boasts fat, chewy noodles, either two or five thick slices of superb pork-belly roast, some token vegetables and an opaque, spectacularly fatty, deep-flavored pork-bone broth. (The optional dose of ferocious raw garlic is highly recommended.) Finishing a bowl is an eating-contest challenge; skip lunch before you go.

AMES STREET DELI

Ames Street Deli's sammies are like next-generation tea sandwiches: petite and precise, imaginative and ultra-sophisticated, much like the food that husband-and-wife team Tse Wei Lim and Diana Kudayarova are known for at their flagship, Journeyman. The bold flavors start with the housemade breads—one features carrot, another, powdered nori—which are customized for from-scratch fillings like rabbit mortadella, smoked apples, cured Arctic char and beef jibarito slathered with scallop mayo.

TORO

The South End's oldest Spanish joint is painfully, raucously crowded from the moment it opens for dinner to nearly the end of service every night, with no reservations. Why do stubborn crowds continue to endure long waits and much jostling in close quarters? Because Ken Oringer and Jamie Bissonnette's creative, beautiful, impeccably sourced take on Barcelona tapas and other treats like Mexican elotes is just plain worth the aggravation. MDM NOODLES

The advent of Boston restaurants specializing in lesser-known regional Chinese cuisines is among our favorite recent dining trends. This Brighton Center storefront offers the trendy mala pot, a spicy build-your-own soup, but its unique satisfactions originate in Central and Western China: Henan, Shaanxi, Chongqing and Xinjiang provinces. At its center are lamb dishes with hand-pulled noodle (a single coiled strand of wide, dense pasta) made fierce with garlic, chilies, cumin and numbing Sichuan peppercorn. It's hearty, bracing and supremely affordable.

BREWER'S FORK

We're under the spell of Brewer's Fork, named for the stirring paddle that early beer makers believed possessed magical, intoxicating powers. (Then we learned about ycast.) Thc granite-topped bar pours out thoughtfully selected craft suds and ciders that cxtinguish flames from the menu's all-wood-fired cookery: small plates, like a skillct of exceptionally tender roasted meatballs, and inventively topped pizzas, like Uncle Jesse's Smoked Pork, laden with rhubarb marmalade. WEST BRIDGE

Yes, the egg in a jar is now famous among local food lovers. (If you haven't yet experienced that pomme puree-meets-crispy duck skin classic, for shame.) But there's much more to Matthew Gaudet's small- and shareable-plates-focused menu, which gives a French kiss to New England victuals like veal and short ribs. Add crafty cocktails and a buzzing terrace overlooking Kendall Square, aglow with the East Coast's coolest startup scene, and West Bridge hatches something special.

PENGUIN PIZZA

Calling it "just a neighborhood pizza joint" is like calling a penguin "just a bird." This Penguin proudly wears a tux, so to speak, serving pies laden with duck confit, preserved fig jam, smoked salmon and other toppings fancier than expected for a simple, lo-fi-looking space. Craft beers flow and locals flock for brunch. Yeah, it's a neighborhood pizza joint—but while looks deceive, taste buds don't lie.

SYCAMORE

Sky-high costs continue to drive talented chefs to Boston's suburbs. Newtonites are among the beneficiaries, as Sycamore offers something they once had to venture into the city for. In this cozy Newton Centre bistro, chefs David Punch and Lydia Reichert and bar manager Scott Shoer offer serious cocktails, carefully crafted small plates, quality charcuterie, delicious vegetarian dishes and beautiful large-format meat and seafood platters. Bostonians lamenting this exodus can comfort themselves that at least it's not in Belchertown.

NEPTUNE OYSTER

Once again, the best restaurant in our most famous concentration of Italian and Italian-American eateries isn't Italian, but a groundbreaking purveyor of exceptional New England raw bar, crudi and cooked seafood, including best-in-class renditions of iconic dishes such as clam chowder and lobster rolls. Competition for its closely packed, no-reservations 42 seats is justifiably strenuous. While you're enduring the long, worthwhile wait, thank Neptune for its debut 10 years ago, when it finally put some substance behind Boston's reputation as a town with great seafood restaurants.

GIULIA

This quiet, rustically attractive restaurant isn't a canonical Italian trattoria: There's no chalkboard menu, and the wine list is too expansive. But in many good senses, chef Mike Pagliarini and partner Pamela Ralston nail the trattoria concept with a keen feel for seasonality, a dedication to clean, hand-crafted flavors (notably in the sublime housemade pastas) and the warm hospitality of a family-driven operation. It's not simply a tremendous neighborhood spot, but one of the best Italian restaurants in the city.

Down a brick-paved alley and secreted away in a small courtyard waits Sophia's, eager to serve Rozzie residents (and in-the-know Italian lovers) homestyle cooking of the highest order. MERENGUE

In a full-service room decorated with the bright colors of sunset over a limpid Caribbean sea, this veteran Dudley Square charmer delivers finely wrought traditional Dominican fare: savory turnovers and fritters, big simple salads, cutlets and fillets of pork, beef and chicken, beautiful seafood dishes and fabulous mofongo, many plates fragrant with the heady aroma of garlic. A short list of beers, modest wines and cordial-based cocktails, plus occasional live music, contribute to Merengue's tropically festive atmosphere.

MOONSHINE 152

Southie is finally putting the bad old days of middling pub menus, crummy pizza and bad Chinese-American fare in its rearview mirror. This new indie in the former home of the Franklin Southie, from nearby resident and chef/owner Asia Mei, shows its commitment to the burgeoning Lower End with inventive Asian-accented seafood dishes, quality vegetarian fare and the odd steak and burger. Good cocktails and nice prices further elevate Moonshine's bar-with-great-food formula above the 'fray of Southie's fast-evolving dining scene.

COPPA

While the South End is recovering nicely from a recession-driven lull in its restaurant scene, Jamie Bissonnette and Ken Oringer's small corner Italian joint continues to deliver great neighborhood value. Simple small plates like superb meatballs, Biss's great skill with charcuterie, delectable pizzas, interesting offal dishes (pig bones and tails, anyone?), pastas in densely flavored sauces, a solid wine and cordials program and a sunny patio on a quiet avenue help explain why Coppa remains reliably and deservedly packed.

OSTRA

This Mediterranean seafood restaurant might be the younger sibling of high-end heavy hitters like Mistral and Sorellina, but its sophistication belies its years. Clad all in white, Ostra exudes elegance—and its EVOO-speckled Continental cuisine, from salt-crusted whole branzino to trevisano leaf-wrapped sea bream, speaks a language of Old World class. Glistening glass wine-bottle displays and live piano set a mood: Fine dining isn't dead—she was just changing into something a little more comfortable.

CASA B

A gorgeous design by its architect owners has helped make Casa B an attractive choice for casual, romantic dinners. Its pretty, intensely flavored dishes, drawing mainly on the cuisines of Puerto Rico and Colombia, immediately grab diners' attention. What has made Casa B thrive, however, is filtering those sensibilities through the prism of a Spanish tapas joint, with the sociability and languid pacing of a meal centered on small plates. It's a canny and utterly winning concept.

ROW 34

The Island Creek team's Fort Point seafood slinger (which just spawned a twin in Portsmouth, New Hampshire) has billed itself as a "workingman's oyster bar," but it's beer director Megan Parker-Gray who does a bang-up job with the ambitious beer program. Old-fashioned letter boards announce the oft-unfamiliar brews that flow from 24 rotating taps, from Maine farmhouse ales to Czech pilsners, many smoked, soured or barrel-aged. These aren't suds for lawn-mowers or lunch pails, but urbane worker bees with elevated expectations.

Breakthrough

MORE LIQUOR LICENSES IN BOSTON

Bostonians love to complain about the red tape that reins in our nightlife scene. But we'll raise our glass to one big coup pushing it forward: the creation of 75 new liquor licenses during the next three years, most of which are designated for underserved neighborhoods such as Dorchester, Roslindale and Roxbury, where they'll hopefully give the restaurant and bar culture (and local economy) a jolt. To the lawmakers who made this happen: Cheers!

CIDER PROGRAMS AND TAPROOMS

Maybe it's the gluten-free appeal, but suddenly cider is everywhere. Programs are deepening, from downtown, where poutine purveyor Saus just expanded its selection, to Heritage of Sherborn, the new venture from Brookline's La Morra team, which offers two taps and cider flights in the suburb that was once home to the world's largest refined cider mill. And dedicated taprooms have popped up in Charlestown, home to Downeast Cider House, in Somerville, home to Bantam Cider Company, and in Natick, where the centuries-old Belkin Family Lookout Farm recently added a charcuterie-augmented taproom that'll lure even the certifiably citified.

LUCKY'S LOUNGE

The Rat Pack era is alive and well at Lucky's, a speakeasy-style bar that hosts weekly Sinatra Saturdays and Sundays and maintains a decidedly retro vibe. Patrons have their choice of two bars—one suited for casual noshing and hanging, the other offering more of a meat market on weekend nights—which means Lucky's has a little something for everyone. Ol' Blue Eyes would be right at home.

Look, little shaver: When you've graduated from cheap scorpion bowls and karaoke at the Hong Kong, we'll see you at this smart but still-fun cocktail den where two bars' worth of masterful vest- and tie-wearing mixologists can school you on spirits one second and chat indie rock the next. (To this scene add fine gastropub eats; serve.) Five years after bringing a more sophisticated drinking culture to Harvard Square, it's still going strong, and we continue to profess our undying affection.

TRINA'S STARLITE LOUNGE

There was plenty of rejoicing in March when Trina's announced it would start serving brunch on Sundays, an indulgence previously offered only on Industry Mondays, which have a packed house of revelers throwing back killer bloodies while old-school hip-hop jams pump out of speakers. The tiny Inman spot attracts many regulars the rest of the week, too, drawing both service pros and Camberville hipsters with an excellent cocktail list, an eclectic beer menu and an always-relaxed vibe.

Boston's only Scottish bar has a vibe so warm, you can practically smell the burning peat. There's a choice selection of craft beers from kilt country, ranging from light IPAs to "wee heavy" brews, and strong cocktails, like the honey bourbon-based Braveheart. But it's the neighborhood feel that really can't be beat during weekend brunch, quiz nights and soccer—sorry, football—viewing parties.

JACOB WIRTH

The glittering marquees fail to mention one of the neighborhood's choice sources of entertainment: this dark-wooded 19th-century piano bar, where ivories are tickled and stein-swinging guests belt gloriously off-key tunes. Named for a Boston businessman who was the first Anheuser-Busch distributor, Jake's may be a bit touristy, but it's a truly festive, old-school, German-inspired beer hall of the cheap-suds-and-spicy-sausages stripe. No wonder we come back for encores.

WILL DAILEY'S NATIONAL THROAT

Will Dailey's first album since splitting with a major label finds the singer/songwriter at a career high. Funded by fans through Pledge Music, National Throat debuted in the top 20 on the Billboard Heatseekers chart, thanks to Dailey's thoughtful, emotive lyricism and folksy hooks. Alternating between introspective soul and kick-in-the-teeth rock 'n' roll, National Throat has the newly liberated Dailey flexing his artistic muscles in confident protest of an industry he'd found increasingly restrictive. Free falling never sounded so secure.

Forget Banksy—we've got street-art talent aplenty right here in Boston. Case in point: 34-year-old graffiti artist and Art Institute of Boston instructor Percy Fortini-Wright, whose dreamlike cityscapes and otherworldly characters have popped up everywhere during the past year, from Liquid Art House and the Copley Society of Art to Art Basel Miami Beach. His unique style, which combines street art's edge with calligraphy's elegance, even scored him a spring collaboration with Adidas, which commissioned a series of paintings inspired by the Boston Marathon that were auctioned off to benefit the One Fund.

SPEEDY ORTIZ

The reviews are in. April release Foil Deer is an expertly crafted sophomore effort, supporting what the indie quartet's critically lauded debut had major outlets proclaiming: This is a band to be reckoned with. Foil Deer simmers with sharp hooks and angular guitars, balanced by artful lyricism and frontwoman Sadie Dupuis' warbling vocals—sweet with a poison edge. It's helped Speedy Ortiz earn coveted slots at some of this summer's big music fests, as well as a couple of dates opening for indie-rock titan Wilco's 20th anniversary tour, which might be among the last times they're billed as openers, if their current trajectory is any indication.

LAUGH BOSTON

The Seaport offers unparalleled harbor views, among other draws, but until recently, it was not a destination for comedy. (Unless you count the amusement of watching drunk 20-somethings teeter out of waterfront bars on summer weekends.) That changed with the addition of Laugh Boston, the 300-seat comedy club from the co-founders of Improv Asylum, which opened in the Westin Waterfront Hotel in 2013. Since then, the stand-up-focused sibling has been a formidable venue for both up-and-coming locals and nationally touring names. And you can even brave the stage yourself at Karaoke or Die, where comedian judges offer color commentary on hopeful contenders.

Though Walsh named a single day for the bicentennial, Boston was treated to a whole season of celebrations, including an exhibit at the Boston Public Library and a Symphony Hall performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah, the composer's epic oratorio that Handel and Haydn premiered in Boston in 1848.

FIND ME BY LAURA VAN DEN BERG

Emerson alum Laura van den Berg's debut novel earned its space on the "most anticipated" lists at the BBC and Time Out New York. Following two well-received story collections, the O. Henry Award winner's first foray into long-form prose is an excellent one, in which she gives voice to Joy, a troubled young woman who is addicted to the cough medicines she steals from her dead-end grocery store job—the result of a life spent in foster homes. When a mysterious epidemic sweeps the nation, she finds herself immune and, for the first time, finds a purpose. Or does she? Van den Berg weaves a darkly surreal, dystopian tale that is as strange as it is engrossing.

HUNTINGTON THEATRE COMPANY'S THE COLORED MUSEUM

This revival of George C. Wolfe's celebrated 1986 satire generated buzz long before the curtains opened. With acclaimed actor/director Billy Porter at its helm (fresh off a Tony-winning run in Broadway's Kinky Boots), it lived up to the hype, as Porter's keen directorial eye guided a mega-talented ensemble cast—Nathan Lee Graham, Capathia Jenkins, Shayna Small, Rema Webb and Ken Robinson—through a potentially tricky work centered on 11 distinct "exhibits." Almost three decades on, the themes of racism and black identity still resonate, perhaps now more than ever.

TOM BRADY JUMPING OFF A CLIFF

Look, it's none of our business what Tom Brady does in his free time (heal the sick, minister to the needy, make superbabies). But can we just ask for this one little thing? Don't jump off cliffs, Tom Brady. Yeah, it turned out fine, we guess, but what if it didn't? What if there was a car just under the surface of that water, or piranhas, or a gust of wind blew you back into the rocks? That was some kind of extreme athlete move, Tom Brady, and you know what happens to extreme athletes? They extremely maim themselves. Please, no more cliff jumps. Don't even eat a Clif Bar, or talk to anyone named Cliff. Go do yoga on the beach with Gisele, and put it on Instagram. Thank you.

WHETHER BOSTON WANTS THE OLYMPICS

Hosting the Olympics is a privilege reserved for cities of great renown. But, you know, they cause a lot of traffic. The Olympics bring in lots of money. But all that infrastructure costs a lot of money, too. The Olympics are an event, a spectacle, a once-in-a-lifetime historic extravaganza. But Olympic villages are all pretty sad once the show is over. The Olympics would be great publicity, jump-starting tourism for years to come. But what if we screwed it up and everyone complained? In conclusion, the Olympics would be wonderful for Boston. Let's hope we don't get the Olympics!

Bright Spot

DUSTIN PEDROIA

The Laser Show's been around long enough that we've come to take him for granted—well, of course, Pedroia will be good. Next issue. The only danger is that Pedroia plays so hard, he might injure himself rounding first base after an RBI single. Oh, wait. Despite his midseason DL stint, he's the only Opening Day starter consistently hitting above .300 (props to Justin Masterson's .667, though), and his power is back after a couple of down years. In the field, he and Xander Bogaerts turn a mean double play, and on the bench the Muddy Chicken is always good for a shot of morale. Whatever problems the Red Sox still have to resolve, Pedroia—once he gets healthy—is not one of them.

Clutch Performance

MALCOLM BUTLER

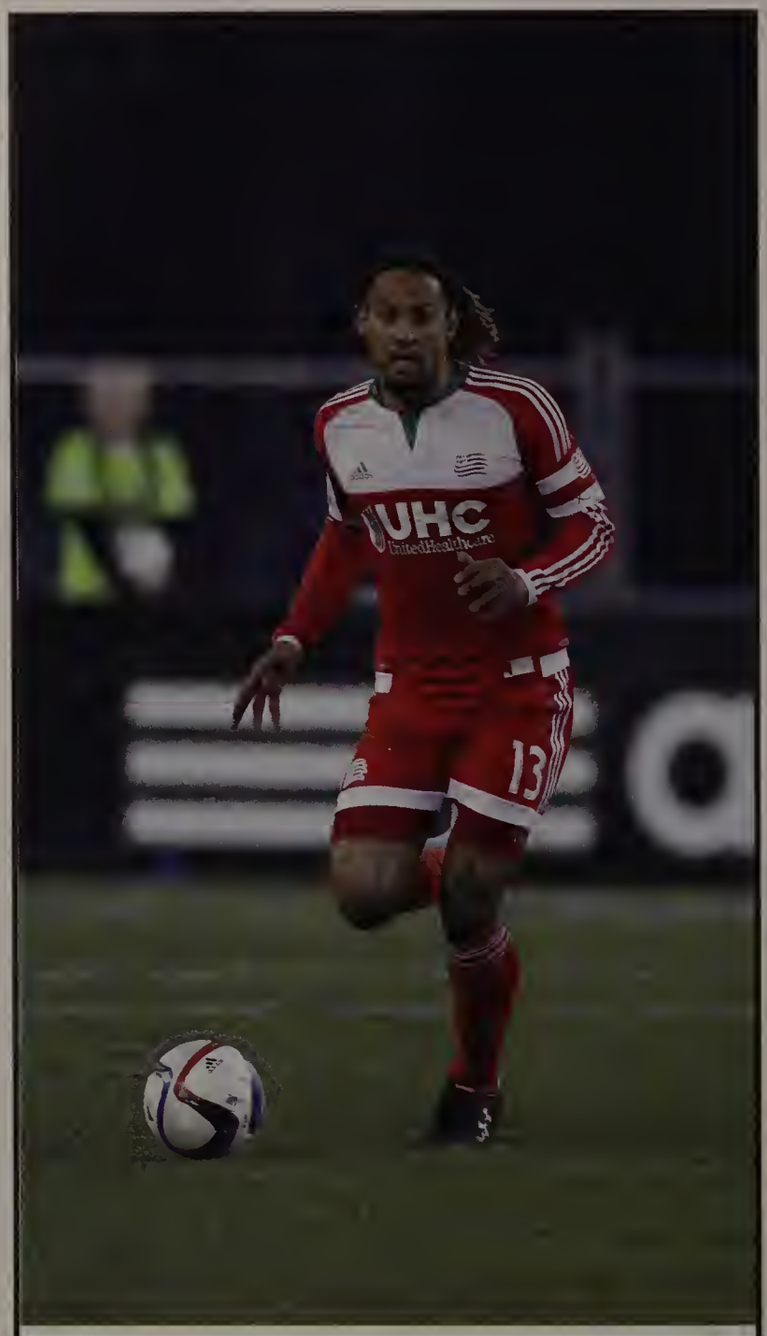
It was over. Somehow, the Patriots and their scowling mastermind were about to hand the Lombardi Trophy to yoga enthusiast Pete Carroll, a guy too nice to cut it in New England. To make matters worse, the backbreaking touchdown would surely be delivered by the Seahawks' only really odious character, Marshawn Lynch. Then we'd have to hear about Beast Mode and Tom Brady's failure for years to come. Except, instead of that sour and entirely predictable outcome, chill dude Carroll overthought the situation: They're expecting a run, so let's call a pass. And that's all it took for cornerback Malcolm Butler to step forward and intercept that pass, rewriting the ending—not only to the game, but to Brady's legacy, too. The whole thing was entirely consistent with the Patriots' modus operandi, where the saviors don't always come from the top of the depth chart.

— COLLEGE ATHLETE —

JACK EICHEL

Normally, a college hockey player develops his skills throughout his undergraduate years, getting better along the way. Boston University freshman Jack Eichel won't get that chance, because he's heading straight for the NHL as one of the top picks in the draft. Last season, Eichel won the Hobey Baker award, led the NCAA in scoring and took BU to the national title game. The North Chelmsford native also played for the U.S. hockey team this spring, showcasing his game against international NHL players. Now it'll be up to his NHL teammates to lecture him on the perils of pounding beers in Snapchat videos—at least until October 2017, when he turns 21.

Highlight Play



EDELMAN'S PASS TO AMENDOLA

Did you know that Patriots wide receiver Julian Edelman was a quarterback in college? The Baltimore Ravens were reminded of that fact during the third quarter of the divisional playoff game, when Brady hit Edelman with a short lateral pass that Edelman subsequently heaved downfield to the streaking Danny Amendola, who caught it in stride and took it in for a 51-yard touchdown to tie the game. Trick play? Maybe, but one that kept the Patriots in the hunt for another title. Don't be surprised to see it again next season.

Most Inspiring

MAICKEL MELAMED

Venezuelan Maickel Melamed was the last person to finish the 2015 Boston Marathon, crossing the finish line about 20 hours after he started. Melamed, who suffers from muscular dystrophy, had to rest after every four or five steps during the final miles, but he kept going despite nasty weather and nightfall (he finished around 5 am). So next January, when you're coming up with an excuse not to train for the Marathon, think about this guy. And then lace up your shoes.

— HOT STREAK —

THE REVS' RUN TO THE CUP FINALS

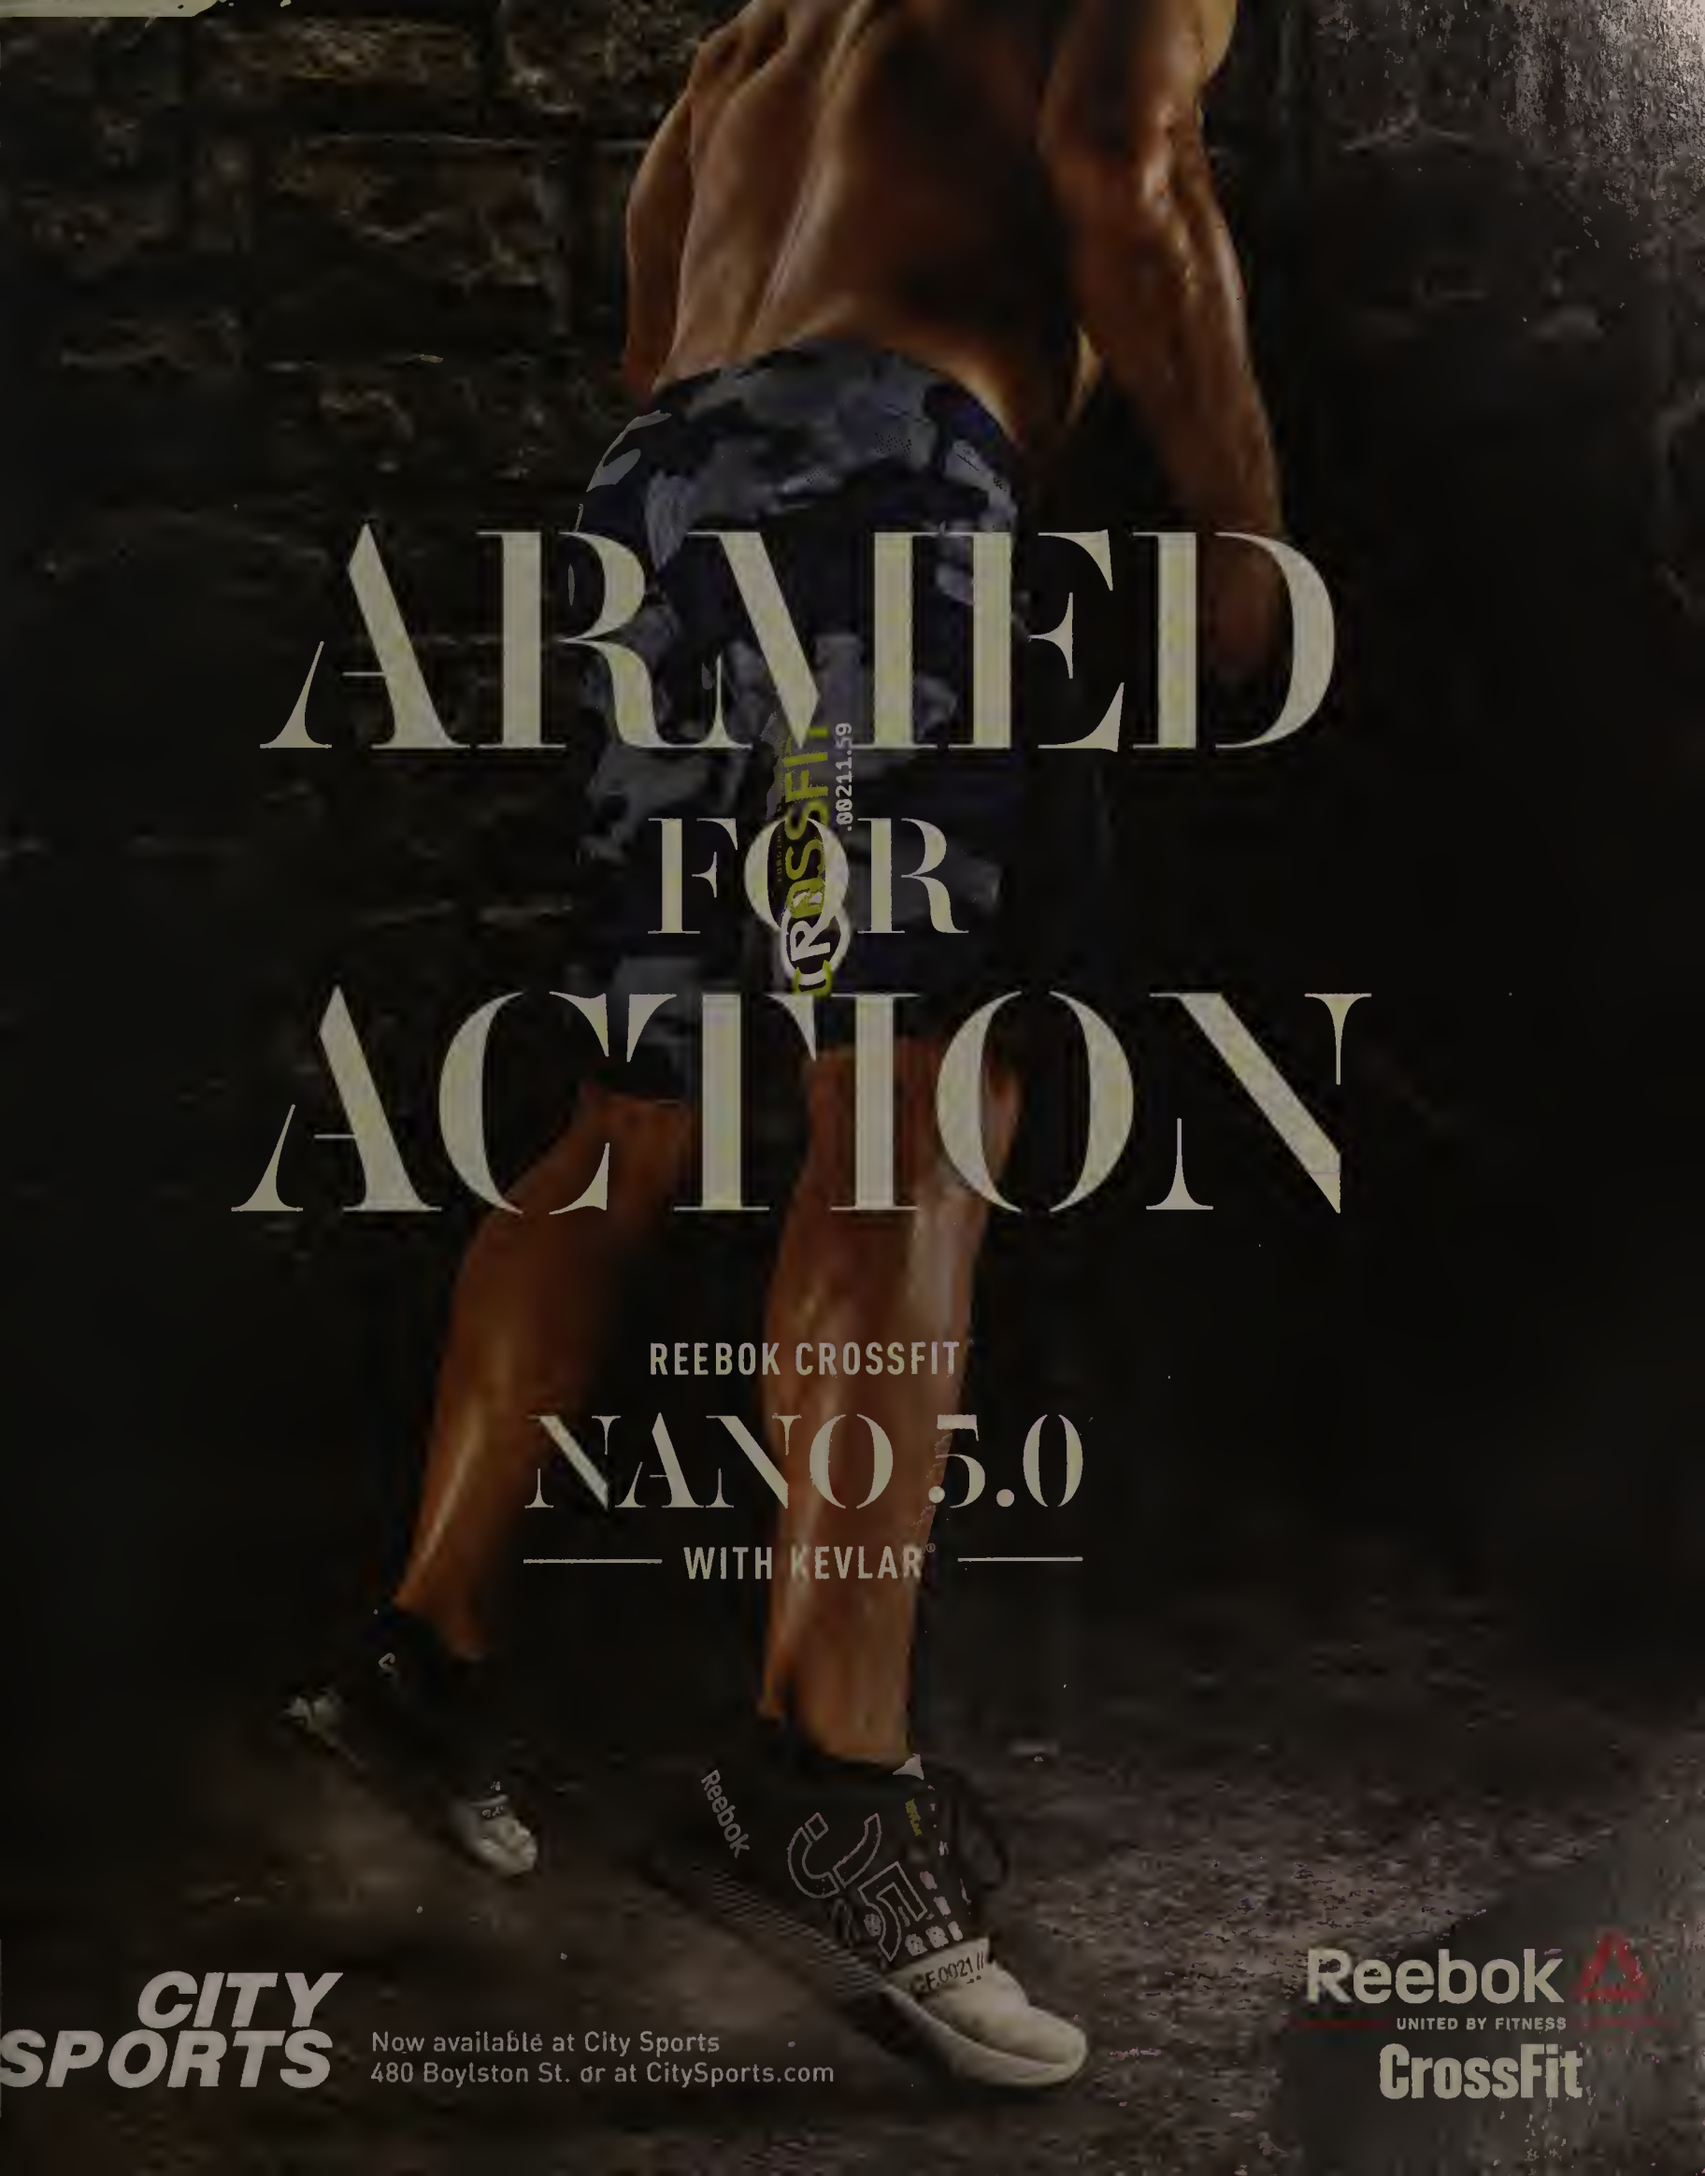
Last August, the New England Revolution signed Jermaine Jones and then won 10 of the final 14 games. The team's last regular season game drew more than 30,000 fans. Yes, the Revs ultimately lost to the LA Galaxy in the MLS Cup finals, but their furious finish helped put them on the radar of casual fans who don't know Manchester United from flying United out of Manchester.

Kingpin

HAKIM EMMANUEL

You think you're hot stuff when you bowl a turkey—three strikes in a row—at Lucky Strike. You might get in your friends' faces and make gobbling noises, or maybe drop a quote from Jesus in The Big Lebowski. Well, try bowling 12 turkeys in a row. That's what Hakim Emmanuel did on Feb. 19 at Westgate Lanes in Brockton, becoming the 26th bowler in history, and first in Massachusetts, to record a perfect series—36 straight strikes. Before that night he'd never even bowled one perfect game, never mind three in a row. As Emmanuel got ready for the final frame of the last game, everyone else stopped bowling to watch tenpin history being made. And despite the pressure, he sealed the deal. Nobody messes with the Hakim.

MVP



TOM BRADY

Let's start with the Super Bowl: Brady led the team to victory from a 10-point fourth-quarter deficit, throwing two touchdowns (of four in the game) on the way to his third Super Bowl MVP. This year he set all-time NFL post-season passing records, threw for more than 4,000 regular-season yards for the fourth consecutive year, and moved past names such as John Elway and Joe Montana on career stats lists. You'd think that by this point, Brady would be philosophical about a tough loss or individual mistake, but on the occasions when he throws a pick or fails to convert on a third down, you can count on the camera finding Brady on the sidelines looking royally pissed. After all the success, he's still got the fire, and that's why Brady's the MVP.

One-Year Wonder

DARRELLE REVIS

No man is an island. And no man who calls himself an island is a Patriot for more than a year, apparently. But we still have Malcolm Butler, right? OK, good.

Project
THE BRUINS

When the Bruins fail to make the playoffs for the first time in eight years, you know someone's going to end up at the gallows like a Game of Thrones character. General manager Peter Chiarelli got canned in April, and coach Claude Julien is on thin ice with new general manager Don Sweeney, haw haw. Looking on the bright side, perhaps the Bruins' abject mediocrity will allow team president Cam Neely to rebuild the squad according to his vision, with more of an emphasis on offensive firepower. Kick some ass, Sea Bass!

— ONE TO WATCH —
ALYSSA NAEHER

Naeher, the Boston Breakers goalkeeper, made the 2015 U.S. World Cup team. It's a well-earned accolade. Last year, she played every minute of every game for the Breakers and won Goalkeeper of the Year on the strength of her 106 saves, a league high. The U.S. women's team has a deep bench—and with jailbird Hope Solo on the roster, it needs it—but Naeher could figure prominently in the team's future prospects. Not just in Brazil for 2016, but in France for 2019.

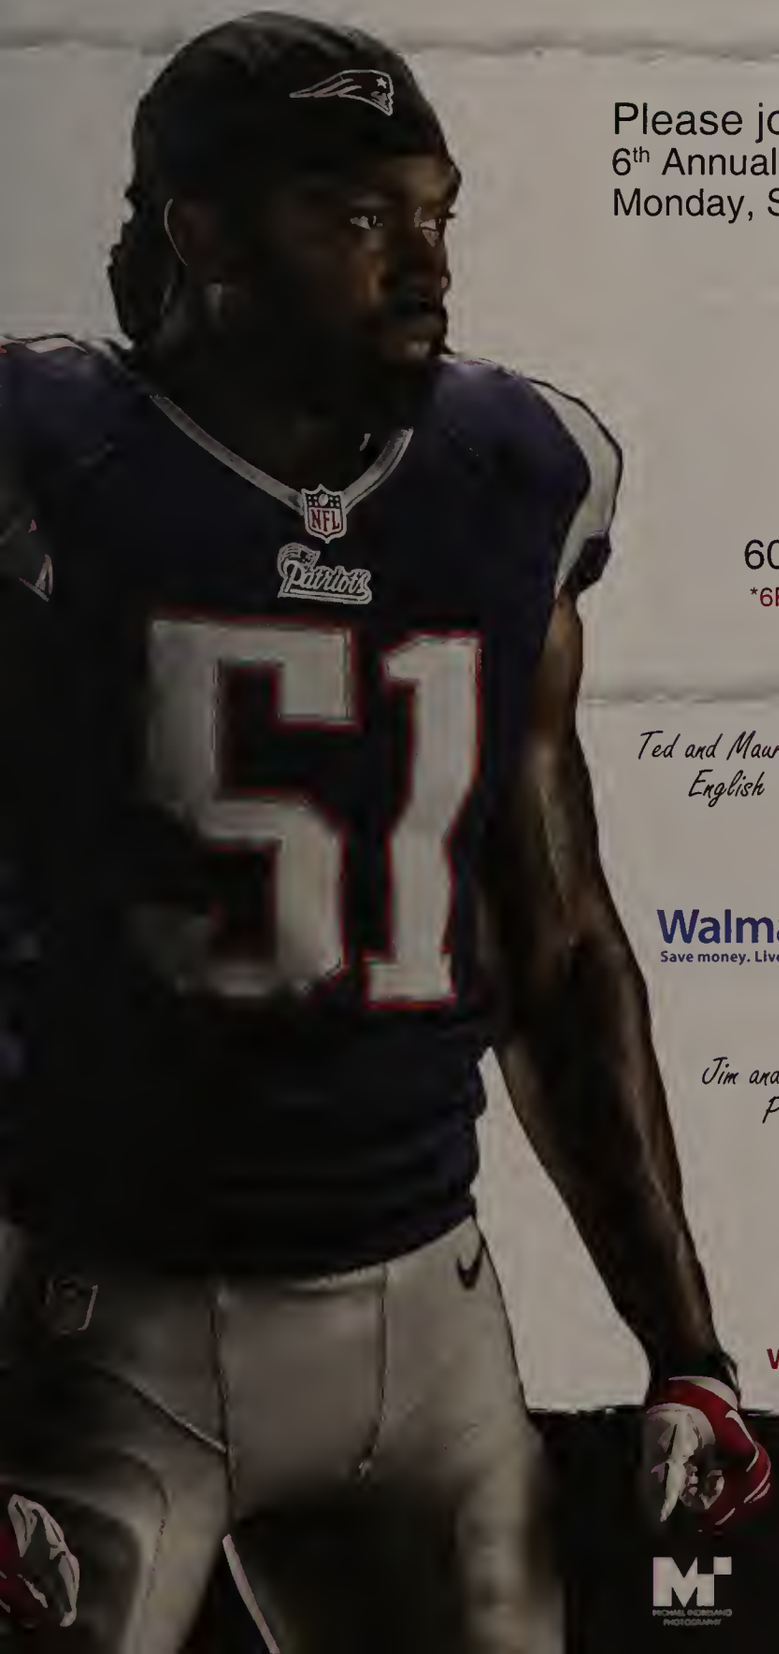
Rookie
MOOKIE BETTS

OK, Mookie's not technically a rookie. But this is his first full year on the job. After a hot spring training, Betts picked up where he left off at the end of his incredible 2014 stint, hitting two dingers and driving in six runs in the first week of this season. He's since proved a streaky hitter—his unremarkable numbers mask some important individual performances, like the game where he hit two solo homers, propelling the Sox to a 2-0 win—but remember, Betts is only 22. Most guys his age are tuning their swings in AA ball, while Betts is developing his game under the critical gaze of millions of fans, during a season when expectations are high. No pressure!

Scrutiny of Balls
DEFLATEGATE

This whole debacle raised way more questions than it answered. Were the Patriots' game balls illegally underinflated when the AFC Championship game began? And if so, why? Were the Colts' balls also underinflated? Could it all have been the weather and the ideal gas law? Why didn't the refs write down the pressure numbers from the start of the game? Why did they use two different gauges—each with different readings—to measure the balls? Why did they let the Colts' balls sit inside a warm locker room before measuring them? And on and on. What we do know for certain is that supposed criminal mastermind James McNally, gameday attendant for the Patriots' locker room, sent a now-famous text to assistant equipment manager John Jastremski. It reads, "Whats [sic] up dorito dink."

— SIXTH MAN —
ISAIAH THOMAS



Funny story: Celtics guard Isaiah Thomas got his name after his father lost a bet over a Lakers-Pistons game in 1989. (Presumably, had the game gone the other way, the other guy might now have a kid named Magic.) Last year, Thomas averaged more than 16 points per game off the bench. He dropped 22 points in each of the first two playoff games against the Cavs. Thomas drives to the basket and draws fouls, a big reason that his Celtics' stats would've put him in the Top 10 in the NBA in free throws made and attempted. And he's in the first year of a four-year deal. Danny Ainge loves to trade, but Thomas might be around for a while.

Basket Case

THE MARKET BASKET SAGA

Last summer, Arthur T. Demoulas, CEO of Market Basket, was booted out by a rival management faction led by his cousin, Arthur S. Demoulas. But what Arthur Demoulas didn't count on was the employees' loyalty to Arthur Demoulas, who became a cult hero when the workers went on strike for his reinstatement. In the end, everything worked out for both Arthur Demoulas and Arthur Demoulas after Demoulas paid Demoulas $1.5 billion for his share of Market Basket. You follow? No? Well, after two months of looking like ransacked Soviet bread warehouses, Market Baskets everywhere reopened, Roxie's in Quincy suddenly got quieter and everyone lived happily ever after.

Find

1795 TIME CAPSULE

Back in 1795, a couple of guys named Paul Revere and Sam Adams put a time capsule in the cornerstone of the State House. There it sat until 1855, when repairs to the building uncovered it. The Bostonians of the day threw in a few coins and put the box back in the cornerstone, where it stayed undisturbed until last December, when a water leak prompted its rediscovery. So, what's inside? Coins, newspapers (in surprisingly good shape) and a silver plate—which might've been made by Revere himself—among other artifacts. After a stint on display at the MFA, the contents went back in the cornerstone in June, with a couple of contemporary items added. We're sure the citizens of Boston circa 2200 will be both impressed and confused by our Gronk erotic fan fiction.

— EPIC FAIL —

THE MBTA

Former MBTA general manager Beverly Scott may have a doctorate, but Dr. Scott couldn't cure what ails the T, and she announced her resignation in February after a series of gaffes that embarrassed the organization and enraged riders. We know, we know—it was a lot of snow. But come on: A lot of the system is underground. In a peace offering, on April 24 the T held "Customer Appreciation Day," with free fares for the day. Which, of course, cost the T an estimated $5 million, which could've been used to fix the very problems that necessitated a Customer Appreciation Day.

End of an Era

HAMERSLEY'S BISTRO CLOSING

When Gordon Hamersley opened his restaurant in 1987, the South End was still sketchy and fine dining tended to be accompanied by pomp and circumstance—head to Locke-Ober, and don't forget your jacket. Hamersley was one of the first to pair elegant dishes with a casual atmosphere, a combination that we now take for granted in a neighborhood that's crammed with great restaurants. Despite all the accolades and success, Hamersley never sold out and slapped his name on a galaxy of spinoffs. He stayed, he cooked, and he did what he knew and loved for longer than just about anybody else. While Hamersley's is gone, its legacy endures in all the places where they believe that the menu is more important than the maître d'.

Friendly Message

1940S THRESHOLD INSCRIPTION

You conceive of the distant past, the 1940s, as a more decorous time in our city's history. Men wore suits and hats even if they were Faneuil Hall manure shovelers by trade, and everyone conserved fuel to fight the Hun. You imagine the word "ma'am" was used a lot. That's the sense you get from old photos or newsreels. But then you find out that, well, maybe Boston's always had its belligerent townies. Last fall, Charlestown homeowner Alex Robinson pulled up his threshold to find a handwritten message dated from May 1941: "Go fuck yourself." Somehow it's exciting to know that, even on the brink of a war with Germany, a Boston flooring guy was already looking for another fight.

— BIGGEST SPLASH —

THE ICE BUCKET CHALLENGE

Beverly native Pete Frates played baseball for Boston College and was always in impeccable physical shape, until he was diagnosed with Lou Gehrig's discasc. Two years after learning the news, Frates and a friend, Pat Quinn, noted the latest charity trend—dumping ice water on your head—and ramped up the Ice Bucket Challenge: Pledge money to fight amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, dump a bucket of ice water over your head and challenge three friends to do the same. We all know what happened next—everyone from Stephen Hawking to Benedict Cumberbatch was doing it (five times in the case of the latter). Thanks to Frates, social media and some good old-fashioned lightning in a bottle, the ALS Association earned about $220 million from the challenge.

March Forward

MAYOR WALSH AND GAY VETERANS IN THE ST. PATRICK'S DAY PARADE

The Southie St. Patrick's Day parade was long engaged in a standoff with LGBT groups over the right to march down Broadway wearing green and throwing beads to people who've been drinking since 7 am. Thus, Mayor Menino instituted a policy that held for about two decades: As long as there were no gays in the parade, there would be no mayor, either. This year, the South Boston Allied War Veterans Council, which organizes the parade, welcomed gay veterans to march, prompting Mayor Walsh to end the boycott. Of course, this year nobody got to march very far—the route was about half the normal length, which had nothing to do with political or social issues, and everything to do with the wicked big pile of snow still clogging the sidewalks. Erin go bragh? How about Erin go shovel.

Proof That There's More Than Meets the Eye

BRAINTREE DRIVER'S MASERATI

Transformers, more than meets the eye. Transformers, Maseratis in disguise? Not according to the Braintree cops, who charged a driver with impersonating a police officer because he Plasti Dipped his Maserati in Decepticon livery, complete with the words "Decepticons, Punish and Enslave" on the door. So, you know, his car looked just like a Braintree cruiser, except for the part about it being a Maserati that says "Punish and Enslave" on the side. A judge threw the case out of court, proving either judicial sensibility or that the Braintree court system has been infiltrated by Decepticons.

— RECORD BREAKER —

LAST WINTER

One-way streets, drifts up to your roof and Jim Cantore setting up quasi-permanent residence: This was Winter 2015. It was like the Blizzard of '78 in slow motion, with empty lots spawning snow farms, heavy equipment chiseling out vertical snow banks and garbage trucks getting stuck on the street. Everyone chronicled the misery on social media, probably setting a Facebook record for the number of photos of French doors blocked by drifts. When it was all done, we also had another dubious record: snowiest winter in Boston history, at 110.6 inches of accumulation, with four feet of snow coming from two huge storms that arrived barely a week apart. At least the relentless storms spawned the Boston Yeti, who provided some comic relief with random appearances across the city. Thank you, Boston Yeti, and may we not see you again for a good long while.

— MOST MISSED —

MAYOR MENINO

Up until last year, it seemed like Thomas Menino was our permanent mayor, as much a city institution as the Common or Paul Revere's house. Boston is not an easy place to navigate politically, and Menino not only survived but thrived, guiding the city to smart growth and flexing the muscle of the office when a situation demanded it. Even his adversaries, and there were a few, respected Menino, a notably unflashy guy in a profession that caters to slick-talking charlatans. He left office early last year—after five consecutive terms—and died in October at age 71. Maybe he knew what lay ahead, even before he publicly revealed his cancer diagnosis. Regardless, he handled the situation pragmatically, setting aside ego for the good of the city, a mayor to the end.

Reason to Drive Instead of Fly

THE NAKED GUY AT LOGAN

Air travel is so onerous: expensive parking, TSA lines, overstuffed overhead bins, naked guys falling through the bathroom ceiling at the terminal. Yeesh! In November, a few Logan travelers got an unpleasant surprise when a naked man fell through the drop ceiling of a women's restroom, a mishap that apparently aggravated said naturalist to the point that he strolled outside and assaulted an 84-year-old man. Police arrested the man, but not before he nude-saulted a cop, too. So next time you're complaining about your 40-minute delay for the flight to Dulles, remember that the situation could be worse.

— ROLL OF THE DICE —

WYNN EVERETT

Will the Wynn casino screw up traffic in Sullivan Square? Will locals get hooked on pai gow poker? Will the casino's harborwalk park be, as Wynn claims, "Boston's most magnificent outdoor gathering spot"? What will come of Mayor Walsh's lawsuit against the Massachusetts Gaming Commission over its handling of the licensing process? We're doubling down on the drama and betting that the Everett site is still a (very contaminated!) pile of dirt next year.

Wicked Fast Southie Parade

GRAND PRIX OF BOSTON

Imagine cars accelerating down D Street at 150 mph. OK, if you live in South Boston, you can probably imagine that pretty easily. But nonetheless, the Grand Prix of Boston, set for Labor Day weekend next year, is going to be a hell of a spectacle, with open-wheel Indy cars negotiating a 2.25-mile street circuit in South Boston. The race should be a resounding success, since driving like a maniac is a matter of honor amongst Bostonians. (Proposal: a warm-up race featuring nothing but cabs. With passengers.) Some locals might grumble about the crowds and traffic that the Grand Prix will bring, but look at it this way: You know that by the end of next summer, Boston will have at least 2.25 miles of smooth pavement. Right?

DECEMBER THIEVES

Lana Barakat grew up in Jordan and lived in London and Mexico City before putting down roots in Boston, and her shop's stock is just as well-traveled. Locals love the selection of small-batch jewelry, bags and hand-dyed scarves from near and far—so much so that after a year in business in SoWa, Barakat opened a second location last fall on Charles Street. Stop by for stackable rings by Krysos + Chandi, ties and pocket squares by Kiriko and leather backpacks by Boston's own Gina DeWolfe, not to mention Barakat's bold jewelry designs.

BRINGING UP BABY

Parents may be sleep deprived and subsist largely on a diet of sticky Cheerios, but at least their little bundles of joy can look like a million bucks. In addition to clothing, accessories, books and toys for infants to tweens, Bringing Up Baby also offers extras such as personalized embroidery, classes for new parents and hands-on crafting workshops for kids. It takes a village to raise a child, but mini Birkin bags and jelly sandals don't hurt, either.

THE CLOSET

If your shopping list includes Chanel bags, Prada frocks and Balenciaga sandals, but your budget hasn't yet caught up, the Closet is your happy hunting ground. A Back Bay fixture for nearly 40 years, this destination for gently worn designer threads boasts a selection that belies its cozy size, automatic markdowns after 30 and 60 days and a staff of living, breathing fashion encyclopedias.

COVET + LOU'S COMPLIMENTARY HOUSE CALLS

Shopping can be therapeutic. Bad lighting, long lines and parking wars? Not so much. Luckily, if you live in the Boston area, you can try fashions from indie darlings such as Athé Vanessa Bruno right in your living room. Tina Burgos, founder of online boutique Covet + Lou, will hand-deliver a personalized selection of pieces to your home (including new arrivals yet to hit the site). Try them on, buy what you love, and Tina leaves with the rest—easy as that. Tupperware parties are sooo last century.

BARNEYS

Wasn't it Oscar Wilde who said, "I can resist anything except temptation ... and handbags"? Barneys' impeccable selection of satchels could loosen the purse strings of the most disciplined shopper, offering a healthy mix of hard-to-find labels (Paco Rabanne and Moreau) and well-known lines (Bottega Veneta and Céline). Browse rock-studded Valentino totes or sidle up to a Stella McCartney Falabella, which practically comes with its own gravitational pull.

SHREVE, CRUMP & LOW

In the market for a 49-carat diamond necklace? When you've really messed up, head here to shop three floors of custom, designer and estate jewelry and watches that are sure to get you off the hook. The old-school grandeur of the mahogany-lined Newbury Street location isn't an act; Shreve, Crump & Low is billed as America's oldest jeweler, having first opened its doors in 1796. And after more than two centuries operating solely in the Bay State, the storied jeweler opened its first shop in Connecticut in December.

WILLIAM CARLTON WORKSHOP

On a quiet street off the North End's main artery sits a new hat shop and haberdashery with a very old soul. Named after self-taught hatmaker Steve Finch's grandfather, William Carlton Workshop turns out handsome handmade caps and leather goods, with clothing and shoe lines possibly in the pipeline. Canine mascot Bentley will step aside to let you inside the shop, where antique Singer sewing machines flank vintage suitcases and even the soft light streaming through the window seems imported from another time.

A few steps below street level in Beacon Hill lies a rhinestone wonderland that would make Liberace blush. Upon first glance, Twentieth Century Limited's bevy of bling may seem overwhelming, but owner Paul Turnberg ensures displays are neatly organized by style and labeled by designer. Shop for pieces from Karl Lagerfeld, YSL and Miriam Haskell or browse collections of Bakelite. The best part? Each trip comes complete with a history lesson thanks to Turnberg's 55 years in the biz, so you'll leave with some sparkle and a story.

MICHAEL DE PAULO

One look at designer Michael De Paulo's sumptuous gowns and recently added ready-to-wear line, and it's not hard to believe that the talented designer was originally trained as an architect. With a flair for sculptural constructions and rich materials like silk, organza and lace, the winsome designer is a go-to for glitterati in Boston and beyond—his gowns have been worn on red carpets at the Oscars, Golden Globes and Tony Awards. And in February, he made his New York Fashion Week debut with a 16-piece "Black Tie" collection, full of custom prints, elegant embroidery and menswear touches on ultra-feminine silhouettes.

FOLKLORICA

The pressing question for anyone who enters Folklorica is where to look first. The store is a richly colored jewelry box, full of go-big-or-go-home necklaces, pavé rings and face-framing earrings. While there are "Who, moi?" delicate gold pieces, we're partial to the "Look at me!" bright and beaded jewelry from designers such as Alexis Bittar and Jenny Bird. With more than 40 years of business under his belt, owner Don Gross knows that, more often than not, bigger—and more colorful—is better.

HANNAH BLOUNT

Jeweler Hannah Blount first won the hearts—and fingers, wrists and ears—of fans with signature styles no doubt inspired by her Nantucket childhood and fisherman father: pearl earrings encrusted with gold barnacles, necklaces bearing sterling silver fishhooks and skate-egg cases. But she continues to push the envelope and prove the versatility of her talent with each new collection, from the finely wrought faces of Camco to the stunning stones of Vanity, in which aquamarine, sapphire and opal shine from claw settings.

Band

THE SULTANS OF SWING

These royal rockers have performed with a list of celebrities (Wayne Newton, Red Hot Chili Peppers' Chad Smith) as diverse as their playlist. Ranging from a seven-member ensemble to a full 17-piece orchestra, the Sultans of Swing can rock your reception, jazz up a cocktail hour with swing, pop, Motown, hip-hop and Latin, and even provide ceremony music. And like true royalty, these Sultans travel far and wide, playing weddings as far away as Florida, New York and Martha's Vineyard.

Bridal Designer

FIRAS YOUSIF

Whether it's for a bride in her 20s or her 60s, Firas Yousif prides himself on creating the dress of her dreams in his signature style: "Classic, with a modern European twist." Though there is no one silhouette he prefers for his bridal designs (he also has a custom fashion line), beach weddings are a specialty, and Yousif uses lighter fabrics that travel well and won't wrinkle to create almost any shape, from sheath to ball gown. He also enjoys designing for same-sex couples seeking aisle styles that complement each other.

MAYFLOUR CONFECTIONS

For Jocelyn Pierce, it's what's on the inside that counts. While presentation is a priority, she admits, "It's more important that it tastes amazing—that's what I'm all about." Her previous career in merchandising design and her French Pastry School training have found a perfect marriage in her role as baker/owner of Mayflour Confections, whose cakes—not to mention cupcakes, croquembouches and canelés—feature locally sourced, organic ingredients, including eggs from a farm near her Rockport studio.

Bridal Party Gifts

FLAT OF THE HILL

Owner Katherine Morse has helped countless brides and grooms get in the right frame of mind for giving gifts, some quite literal: One of the most popular options are frames engraved with couples' wedding hashtags. But the beloved Beacon Hill gift shop stocks other customizable finds, such as GiGi New York monogrammed clutches or trays engraved by Manchester-by-the-Sea's Mariposa, not to mention bridesmaid-ready bling, like Dogeared inspirational necklaces and Julie Vos pearls.

Catering

THE CATERED AFFAIR

It may be the exclusive caterer for some of Boston's chicest wedding venues, from the Boston Public Library to the Castle at Park Plaza, but the Catered Affair is just as comfortable customizing backyard tented affairs. Plates are made to please both the eye and the palate, says director of business development Elaine Twombly, whose seasoned staff prides itself on creating authentic flavors for Kosher, Indian, Ecuadorean, Asian and Persian dishes—even incorporating a couple's family recipes.

ORLY KHON FLORAL BOUTIQUE

"We try to do modern, organic elements, very textural and bold," says Orly Khon, who's not surprised that grooms seem as excited about floral consultations as brides. Or maybe they're just tagging along to enjoy the leather chairs at Restoration Hardware, where the boutique is housed. Either way, couples benefit from Khon's background as a graphic designer and artist, which inspires her to create an atmosphere that she calls "more fun than froufrou."

DJs

BEAT TRAIN PRODUCTIONS

Founder Ari Rosenfield says his Beat Train colleagues are more than just DJs—they're "music connoisseurs." So if your tastes wander more into B-side territory than "YMCA" and "Uptown Funk," the mixers are at the ready. And given the club pedigrees of the roster, who've spinned at hotspots such as Shrine and Good Life, even the most reticent wallflowers should be tapping their toes.

Engagement Rings

JOSEPH GANN JEWELERS

After three generations as a family-owned business, Joseph Gann Jewelers has plenty of experience helping meld others' new families. Carrying labels large and small, like Ritani, Sasha Primak, ArtCarved and Gabriel & Co., the downtown store also specializes in modern halo settings, custom bands, vintage styles and loose diamonds of all shapes and sizes, giving couples plenty to choose from.

Hair Stylist

EMILY REALE OF BEAUCAGE SALON & SPA

Emily Reale has advice for the newly engaged: "You don't have to start growing your hair out that moment and look like someone who's not yourself." Enhancing a bride's natural tresses is always her goal, be it with "loose, organic" waves or shorter hair "oomphed up" with a few extensions for volume. No matter what, the style will "never be stiff or stuffy," much like Reale's personality. "I've fallen in love with doing weddings," she says. "My favorite moment is the bride's father's first look, and they cry, and I cry. You connect with the family on a whole other level."

CEREMONY

Owner Alix Childs wants to provide an experience that's far from the Saturday-morning fluorescent-light frenzy of the "wedding warehouse." Her airy, light-filled space features personalized service and ethereal, whimsical styles from labels such as Rue de Seine and Alexandra Grecco. And the Beacon Hill boutique is more than a one-stop shop, with accessories, invitation services and frequent events such as hair stylist consultations to help you look your Big Day best.

Invitations

PAPER MOSS

The right invitation can convey volumes in a few words. "It sets an expectation for tone, experience and dress code," says Paper Moss founder Emily Hostetler, who enjoys "getting guests excited about the events." She's also excited about a recent addition to her letterpress studio's offerings: the Collection, a new line of ready-to-order invites with a lower price point and shorter turnaround that complement her custom creations, which have won fans as far away as Australia and also include programs, menus, maps and even coasters.

JEANNIE VINCENT

Jeannie Vincent has loved makeup since middle school, when she threw a makeover party that still provides photo fodder for Throwback Thursdays. Today, however, she loves the relationships with her clients even more than her palettes. "It's a real connection when you are right in someone's face," she explains. That connection is especially keen on someone's wedding day. "My work is about bringing them a look that is both special and romantic, but also natural and true to who they are."

SILVER AND SALT

Photography runs in Ben Schaefer's family. His father was passionate about the art, and his brother's previous career as a wedding photographer inspired Schaefer—who'd majored in economics—to switch courses about eight years ago. Now he specializes in an unobtrusive photojournalistic style enriched by his own nuptials to fellow wedding photographer Connie Miller. "I developed a newfound respect for what each and every one of my couples are going through," says Schaefer, who strives to capture "all of these little moments of the people we love, together."

DANGER BOOTH

Newlyweds often give props to Danger Booth—but it's not necessarily a two-way street. Unlike other companies that provide a standard bucket of feather boas and Viking helmets, the Brighton outfit offers guides for making personalized props so that each celebration is different, with many couples opting to feature their pets as cardboard cutouts. Plus, owner Zac Wolf has a knack for putting shy guests at ease, the open-air format makes group shots a snap, and gratification is close to instant: Pictures print in 19 seconds.

LOLO EVENTS

Conceiving of the Big Day as "the first occasion a married couple is entertaining friends and family as one unit," LoLo founder and lead designer Lo McShay likes to incorporate touches guests might see at an intimate dinner party, like tables of different shapes and sizes that avoid a banquet hall feel. In-depth consultations likewise help keep things personal. "We talk about what your dream home looks like, where you're going on vacation, what you're reading," McShay says. "The design process is really about fine-tuning ideas that tell a couple's unique story."

THOMPSON ISLAND

Some couples dream of a private retreat for their honeymoon, but Thompson Island gets the party started early. The 204-acre preserve features views of the Boston skyline and three ceremony-site options, and soon-to-be spouses can opt for a tented reception with dancing and a four-course dinner or something less formal with a clambake, lawn games and a bonfire. The island also offers a private ferry and overnight accommodations for up to 160 guests.

HARVARD ART MUSEUMS

The recent marriage of three Harvard museums gave art lovers something to rejoice about. Now lovers can do the same under that conjoined roof at one of the area's newest—and most in-demand—reception venues. In addition to the light-filled Calderwood Courtyard, there's the intimate Adolphus Busch facility, built in the spirit of a grand hall with period stonework and casts of medieval and Renaissance sculptures. And in warmer months, the adjoining terrace and garden make a sweet setting too.

ALTERNATIVE REGISTRIES

Fewer couples need the registry staples of yesteryear. Besides, who wants an eighth spatula? What they can do is toast a new union with a fine glass of vino from Central Bottle or the Urban Grape's registries. Other couples are opting for more personal wish lists for, say, camping gear or cookbooks, or even choosing to highlight a favorite charitable cause: Animal lovers can ask their nearest and dearest for contributions to local shelters such as PAWS New England or the MSPCA.

— TUXEDOS —

9TAILORS

The most successful couples are those who shop together—at least for wedding attire, says 9tailors co-founder Samantha Shih. "A wedding is a joint experience, so it's helpful to have the bride there so they can bounce ideas off each other." In addition to unique fabrics and custom styles, the Leather District studio prides itself on a "concierge level of service" for a clientele that includes many same-sex couples, as Shih notes, "Some brides aren't comfortable in a gown and may not feel comfortable shopping in a big-box store."

AGENDA for 7/1–7/21

Box Tops

Fest for free!

AFTER AN INAUGURAL 2013 fest brought more than a week of free, genre-spanning performances to town, Outside the Box went dormant last year to the dismay of many local arts lovers. But the festival, organized by Boston philanthropist Ted Cutler, used the hiatus to regroup and gather more than 80 acts for this summer's edition. It'll take over the Common for six days of free programming, including appearances by '90s alt-rockers the Gin Blossoms, indie roots stalwarts Guster and buzzy Danish electro-rockers New Politics, along with dance from the Floorlords and Boston Bhangra, theater from Sleeping Weasel and Fort Point Channel Theatre and much more. Get your fun in the sun on July 14-19 on the Boston Common. Alexandra Cavallo

EXTRA, EXTRA!

Once upon a time, people got their news from actual newspapers rather than 140-character tweets. Adapted from the 1992 cult-favorite film starring Christian Bale, Newsies tells the story of a scrappy group of boys tasked with delivering that news—who wind up making headlines themselves. The Tony-winning musical follows Jack "Cowboy" Kelly, who survives by hawking newspapers on the mean streets of New York. Times are tough at the end of the 19th century, and the fat cats who own the papers are even tougher, as Jack and his fellow newsies learn when a price hike prompts a strike. Loosely based on the true story of the newsboy strike of 1899, Newsies features a rousing score by Alan Menken and runs through July 5 at the Boston Opera House. | Alexandra Cavallo

SPACE INVADERS

With Jurassic World smashing box-office records, it's official: Nineties nostalgia is in full gear. But Steven Spielberg's dinosaur franchise isn't the only Clinton-era blockbuster that's cashing in. Director Roland Emmerich's Independence Day set the standard for box-office rampages on July Fourth weekend nearly 20 years ago, and he's working on Independence Day: Resurgence, a sequel to the sci-fi blockbuster that's set for release next summer. In the meantime, you can enjoy the special effects, Fresh Prince-era Will Smith and lines like "All right, you alien assholes... up yours!" that helped make the original a classic. Blast into the past on July 3 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre. / Charlie Gill

PHOTOFEST

Reviews by Brett Michel

AMY ★★★1/2 I didn't know much about the late Amy Winehouse's music before watching this heartbreaking documentary from Asif Kapadia, but I was mourning her by the end. Kapadia's last picture was the 2010 doc Senna, about another talent who died too soon, Brazilian F1 driver Ayrton Senna. But it seems that was just the qualifying lap for this devastating portrait of the soulful singer who died from alcohol poisoning nearly four years ago at the age of 27. Given how much of a punch line Winehouse had become because of her public drunkenness (an infamous outdoor music festival in Serbia where she was too intoxicated to sing is shown here to powerful effect), I was one of many who wasn't surprised by her death, but Kapadia has vindicated her tremendously, compiling warts-and-all footage—much of it shot on camcorders and cellphones by some of her closest friends and enablers—that begins when she was a 14-year-old Jewish girl in North London. The first footage we see was shot at a birthday party, where we hear her gorgeous voice. "Life is short," Amy says on camera at one point. Indeed, tragically. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

AVENGERS: AGE OF ULTRON ★★ Writer/director Joss Whedon's sequel to his 2012 blockbuster, The Avengers, opens with a well-choreographed sequence highlighting the superhero team's effectiveness. Unfortunately, this isn't matched by the choppy, quick-cut CGI destruction that follows once Tony Stark—the man inside Iron Man—accidentally creates the Avengers' robotic nemesis, Ultron (voiced by a deliciously arch James Spader), who takes on a bit of his dad's ironic sensibilities, quipping so much that his menace is hampered. In fact, much of Whedon's patented banter falls flat, dampening the fun that was so present in the previous picture. Hawkeye, aka Clint Barton, who spent much of the first adventure as a mind-controlled zombie, becomes the most fully formed character, and Natasha Romanoff/Black Widow receives both backstory and an ill-advised romance with Bruce Banner—who transforms into the green-skinned Hulk when his blood pressure rises—while Iron Man (Robert Downey Jr.), Captain America (Chris Evans) and Thor (Chris Hemsworth) have less to do when hurling one-liners at one another. But it's Linda Cardellini, who appears as Barton's civilian wife, that gets perhaps the best line: "You know I totally support your Avenging." So do we. But for how long? (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

DOPE ★★★ Unlike the dreadful Me and Earl and the Dying Girl, here's a buzzed-about award winner from this year's Sundance Film Festival that deserves its hype. A comic drama from Rick Famuyiwa (director of 2010's Our Family Wedding, which starred this film's producer and narrator, Oscar winner Forest Whitaker), it's a modern spin on Risky Business for the post-hip-hop generation. High school senior Malcolm (newcomer Shameik Moore) is a geek who loves the music and style of what he calls the "golden age of hip-hop," and he dresses the part, colorfully, right up to his high-top fade. He spends his days with best pals Jib (The Grand Budapest Hotel's Tony Revolori) and Diggy (Kiersey Clemons of Amazon's Transparent) as the three tool around the Bottoms, a tough neighborhood in their hometown of Inglewood, California, trying not to get their bikes stolen by gang members. But Malcolm finds trouble all on his own—and possibly love. Funny and charming, Dope is, well, pretty dope. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

EX MACHINA ★★1/2 Many viewers of this science fiction thriller, the directing debut of Alex Garland, writer of Danny Boyle's 28 Days Later and Sunshine, will mispronounce the title of this movie, oblivious to its origins. This is probably for the best, since Garland's script isn't nearly as smart as he seems to think it is. Ostensibly, this is a film about the most advanced artificial intelligence ever created. Too bad writer/director Spike Jonze explored this concept far more effectively two years ago with his Oscar-winning script for Her, which featured a man falling in love with the operating system in his cellphone. That OS was voiced by an unseen Scarlett Johansson, while here, the AI is visibly embodied by Alicia Vikander as Ava. Caleb Smith (Domhnall Gleeson), a programmer at an Internet-search giant, has been brought to the private mountain estate of the company's brilliant CEO, billionaire recluse Nathan Bateman (Oscar Isaac), to evaluate Ava's human qualities, but is there more going on here? Sadly, yes, and the mystifying conclusion leaves you yearning for the halcyon days of murderous AI like 2001's HAL. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD ★★ Director Thomas Vinterberg has mounted a handsome adaptation of Thomas Hardy's mid-19th-century-set literary classic that's completely superfluous in the face of John Schlesinger's nearly three-hour 1967 version that's superior in every way. Although the Dane has filled his update with strong actors—Carey Mulligan as the self-willed Bathsheba Everdene and Matthias Schoenaerts, Michael Sheen and Tom Sturridge as her three wildly different suitors—they come across as children compared to the earlier cast, which featured British legends Julie Christie, Alan Bates, Peter Finch and Terence Stamp projecting far more palpable longing in the same roles, working from a script by Frederic Raphael that took its time establishing an air of violence that threatened to overtake the sweeping romance at any moment. Vinterberg's picture runs a hair under two hours with a script courtesy of David Nicholls (screenwriter of 2011's romantic drama One Day and author of the novel it's based on). The heat-lacking results play like CliffsNotes as composer Craig Armstrong's score lays the piano and violin strings on thick, overcompensating for the sexual chemistry that was presumably left on the cutting room floor, far from the screen. (At West Newton.)

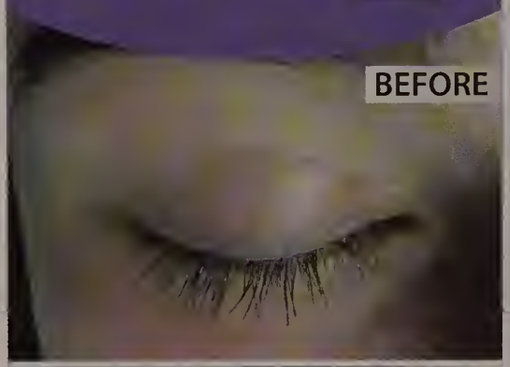
I'll See You in My Dreams ★★★ Blythe Danner shines in this comic drama directed by Brett Haley. She plays Carol, a retired schoolteacher and former singer in her 70s who's been widowed for 20 years. Her tranquil routine of playing cards with close friends (nice turns by Rhea Perlman, Mary Kay Place and June Squibb), tending to her garden and (especially) relaxing with a glass of wine is disrupted when her beloved dog dies. All alone in her spacious LA home, she finds loneliness creeping into that routine, until two new men enter her life: Lloyd (Martin Starr), the 30-something pool man who begins sharing that wine with her, and Bill, the gravelly-voiced old cowboy (played by Sam Elliott, naturally) who begins wooing Carol, who hasn't dated since her husband's death. The script, courtesy of Haley and Marc Basch, avoids veering into cliche, and Danner exhibits an easy rapport with the ensemble that belies the compressed shooting schedule on this charming independent production. Some tears are shed, but Danner's transcendent turn behind the mic at a karaoke bar keeps the movie singing. A nice, small-scale alternative to blockbuster fatigue. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)



Inside Out ★★★1/2 Riley Anderson (voiced by Kaitlyn Dias), the 11-year-old girl at the center of Pixar's 15th animated marvel, has just moved from Minnesota to San Francisco, where her cramped new house is creaky, old and gray. But then, this isn't your typical sunny kids fare. This third feature film from writer/director Pete Docter (Monsters, Inc., Up) is presented from a uniquely creative perspective: inside her head, in a control room known as Headquarters. Staffed by a crew of five emotions, Riley's mind offers a colorful counterpoint to her drab new surroundings. Joy (a chipper Amy Poehler), the leader of the group, is a yellow-hued pixie. Joy has been Riley's dominant emotion, but now that the young girl faces depressing circumstances—living somewhere unfamiliar, starting at a new school with no friends—Sadness (Phyllis Smith), teardrop-shaped and appropriately blue, is becoming more prominent. Rounding out the emotions are Anger (Lewis Black), Fear (Bill Hader) and Disgust (Mindy Kaling). Docter, one of Pixar's founding members (a cohort known within the company as the "Brain Trust"), makes his diagnosis clear: Sometimes, it takes a touch of sadness to experience and appreciate real joy. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jurassic World ★★ The original Jurassic Park was directed by Steven Spielberg. This third sequel is directed by its visual effects. Naturally, the film's a runaway success. It's also unnecessary—when it's not busy being incredibly stupid. But if you like dinosaurs? Hoo-boy, is this the film for you! Remember Jeff Goldblum's Ian Malcolm? He's not in this. No, there's a new "rock star" in town: Chris Pratt's Owen Grady. He's some kind of Raptor Whisperer. Why? Why not. He's also a one-dimensional "type," like everyone else here. The movie's in such a rush that Bryce Dallas Howard's uptight Claire Dearing doesn't have time to remove her high heels, even when running from a Tyrannosaurus Rex. Oh, the poor, old-fashioned, sponsor-free T-Rex. She might as well be extinct, compared to the new genetic hybrid dubbed "Verizon Wireless presents the Indominus Rex." Alas, not a single sequence matches the sheer, white-knuckle terror of the T-Rex attack in the original. But then, Spielberg is known for his peerless action sequences, while this picture's hired hand, Colin Trevorrow, had only made one small-budget indie before being handed the keys to the theme park. His work's competent. Verizon should sponsor his next blockbuster. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Love & Mercy ★★★1/2 By all rights, Bill Pohlad's biographical film about the life of Brian Wilson shouldn't work. This unconventional portrait of the singer/songwriter and leader of the Beach Boys focuses on two eras in the troubled genius's life: the creative renaissance surrounding Pet Sounds and two decades later, when he emerged from a couple of years in bed, heavily medicated and under the 24/7 watch of dubious therapist Eugene "Gene" Landy, played by a fright-wigged Paul Giamatti. Within the film's tricky structure (terrifically edited by Dino Jonsäter), Gene stands as Brian's second abusive father figure; the physical abuse inflicted by his actual father (Bill Camp) left him mostly deaf in his right ear. And yet, Brian could still hear the music in his head. Alas, he also heard voices, which he confesses to his love, Melinda Ledbetter (Elizabeth Banks), during one of many quietly devastating scenes set in the '80s, where he's played by John Cusack, who doesn't remotely resemble the real Wilson, unlike Paul Dano, who portrays him during the '60s. Like I said, it shouldn't work. But like Wilson himself, the seemingly incompatible aspects come together—and they sing. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Mad Max: Fury Road ★★★1/2 Max Rockatansky returns, madder than ever, but more hardened. He's a changed man, played by Tom Hardy, filling the boots previously worn by Mel Gibson in filmmaker George Miller's first three Mad Max pictures. In hindsight, the climactic 14-minute chase sequence in 1982's The Road Warrior served as a test run for Mad Max: Fury Road, which the 70-year-old Miller has distilled into a single two-hour chase. This is pure cinema, and it shames the work of directors half Miller's age. When Max is captured by brutal warlord Immortan Joe (Hugh Keays-Byrne), he becomes a "blood bag" for Nux (Nicholas Hoult), a cancer-ridden "War Boy" who requires transfusions. Meanwhile, Imperator Furiosa (Charlize Theron), one of Joe's lieutenants, has secretly liberated his five wives in her War Rig. A small army of Joe's War Boys gives pursuit, and Max, chained to the front of Nux's hot rod, is along for the ride. Vehicular mayhem ensues and Max escapes, teaming up with Furiosa, his fate now bound to hers. As the armies of more warlords converge, the earlier films' battles for oil and gas are replaced by a fight for something more precious: human life. A masterpiece of motion. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Pitch Perfect 2 ★★ Like another of this year's sequels, The Second Best Exotic Marigold Hotel, this encore to Pitch Perfect reunites characters from a beloved film based on a novel—and the results are just as out of tune. Without a strong foundation for her screenplay, returning writer Kay Cannon takes Mickey Rapkin's characters, the Barden Bellas—Beca (Anna Kendrick), Fat Amy (Rebel Wilson), Chloe (Brittany Snow), et al.—adds a legacy member (Hailee Steinfeld) and a Hispanic stereotype (Chrissie Fit) to their ranks, and then fails to give them anything new to do. Instead, she has the Bellas open the movie with a birthday performance for the president, then proceeds to humiliate them after a wardrobe malfunction exposes Fat Amy's vagina to the Obamas. Really. In order to restore their good name and standing before they all graduate, the a cappella group must win an international competition in Copenhagen. Elizabeth Banks and John Michael Higgins also return as a pair of racist, homophobic competition commentators, with Banks pulling double-duty in her directorial debut. Alas, the Pittsfield native can't quite keep this from becoming caca-pella. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Spy ★★★ There's been a welcome trend of women taking on roles typically associated with men this summer, and now we have a movie bluntly titled Spy to subvert James Bond-style genre tropes. It not only gives us a requisite pre-credit action sequence featuring a suave, globe-trotting agent played by Jude Law, but it also offers up Jason Statham in bulldoggish Daniel Craig mode as a second CIA spook. However, the script then contrives to blow one agent's cover and the other's brains from the back of his head, opening up an undercover opportunity for the film's true star, Melissa McCarthy. That's right: This is a comedy, one that once again pairs the force of nature with writer/director Paul Feig after their successful collaborations on Bridesmaids and Heat. Unlike those pictures, though, this is a one-woman show, giving McCarthy ample room to display her talents once she leaves behind her basement-dwelling desk-analyst role, donning a variety of personas and disguises as she infiltrates the ring of a deadly arms dealer played by Rose Byrne, her Bridesmaids co-star. And surprisingly, McCarthy's Susan Cooper kicks a lot of ass—when she's not tickling funny bones. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Tomorrowland ★★ If you've seen The Incredibles and Ratatouille, the computer-animated Pixar classics Brad Bird wrote and directed, you're aware that he's gifted. So, I hate to report that his new live-action film is a mixed-message mess. A science-fiction mystery adventure, it celebrates exceptional people like himself—but with the unexpected implication that those who are average have no place in tomorrow's world. Nevertheless, the Walt Disney production's visual marvels are apparent from the outset, when Bird whimsically replaces the Magic Kingdom in the Mouse House's animated logo with the titular retro-futuristic, utopian cityscape. George Clooney plays former boy genius and current middle-aged, reclusive grump Frank Walker, who's dragged into danger by peppy high-schooler Casey Newton (25-year-old Britt Robertson). Proclaiming that utopia can only be achieved through positive thinking, Frank posits that society has poisoned its well by celebrating and consuming dystopian entertainments. This, after Bird's film has violently dismembered and abused human-looking robots, vaporized three police officers and—in true Disney fashion—punished the token villain with death. Meanwhile, I'm positively thinking I'd rather be entertained by another viewing of the dystopian Mad Max: Fury Road than be lectured about why I shouldn't. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

WARMING UP

Boston's forecast calls for thoughtful lyricism, guitar-picked melodies and a chance of introspection when the Weather Station stops in town. Fronted by actress-turned-singer/songwriter Tamara Lindeman, the Toronto-based outfit first gained prominence with their 2009 debut, The Line, a bucolic folk record marked by spare, lovely melodies and simple yet emotive reflection. Their third and latest album, Loyalty, recorded with the help of musician Afie Jurvanen, aka Bahamas (known for his work with the likes of Feist and Jack Johnson), finds the songbird flexing her creative chops on an album chronicling lovers' late-night phone calls, cross-country road trips and many an unsaid "I love you." The Weather Station reports to Great Scott on July 14. / Molly Jane Thoms

Edited by Sarah Hagman

THINK OUTSIDE THE BREADBOX

Designers and architects find middle ground in Bigger Than a Breadbox, Smaller Than a Building, a challenge from the Boston Society of Architects that spurred local and international firms to flex their creative muscles and test out new building techniques. MYKA's Katie Donahue, Mason Limke and Yandy Cheng stepped up to the plate with their winning design, The Pulp Canopy, an installation featuring two weeks' worth of (unused!) toilet paper rolls from the Denver International Airport. On view through Oct. 4, it's strung across the Atlantic Wharf lobby beside the BSA Space, where you can also check out other small- and large-scale submissions, like Brandon Clifford and Wes McGee's Microtherme, a thermal concrete bath that challenges conventional notions of comfort. / Sarah Hagman

QUICK STUDY

There's no need to search for a silver lining in Matthew Quick's literary success—in 2012 his debut novel The Silver Linings Playbook was adapted for the big screen, where it became an awards-show darling. His latest work is set to follow in its footsteps. Sony Pictures has already picked up the rights to Love May Fail, a novel about a woman who leaves behind riches (and a cheating husband) to return to her hometown, befriending her former high-school teacher and helping him restore his reputation after a traumatic resignation. Better start polishing those Oscars—the best-selling author heads to Porter Square Books on July 14. / Meghan Kavanaugh

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest e[illegible]

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hardwood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweency's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Something's always brewing at Best of Boston's award winning beer bar. HAVE HAT, WILL PARTY

The grande dame of all ladies' luncheons, Party in the Park never fails to amaze in terms of fashion (specifically hats), food (bold choice, serving veal) and drama (but what do you expect when the champagne starts flowing at 11 am?).

A fundraiser for the Emerald Necklace Conservancy, the party was held at Pinebank Promontory overlooking Jamaica Pond, and the fiercely social crowd included the likes of event founder Wendy Shattuck, co-chairs Cackie Austin, Lynn Dale, Kim Furnald, Holly Safford and Camille Valentine, the flawless Julie Hume Gordon and Connecticut squire Krystian von Speidel, Gardner head honcha Anne Hawley, blond beauty Willa Bodman, the stunning Eve Rounds, fashionista Yolanda Cellucci, lovebirds Nick and Amy Penna, dangerous mother-daughter duo Linda Waintrup and Samantha Hanman, honoree Mark Volpe of the BSO, über-philanthropist Don Rodman, iconoclastic Brahmin Sylvia Pope, Beacon Hill beauty Tess Atkinson, blond cutie pie Ellie Chu, fashion goddesses Laura Baldini and Ashley Bernon, Cambridge doyenne RoAnn Costin, the statuesque Jennifer Iovino, redheaded beauty Lauren Beckham Falcone, the always fabulous Diana Rockefeller and New York Fashion Week doyenne Fern Mallis, who deemed Boston's ladies chic in the extreme, despite their reputation for being otherwise.

The welcome tent filled up rapidly and threatened to get steamy, and trays of bubbly were quickly replenished. Then everyone was ushered into the lushly landscaped luncheon with a trumpet fanfare that prompted one guest to mutter, "What? Is Kate Middleton coming?"

Assorted speeches, awards, auction, asks and raffle prizes later, everyone was feeling no pain, and it became apparent that Frederick Law Olmsted's greatest accomplishment was still in safe keeping.

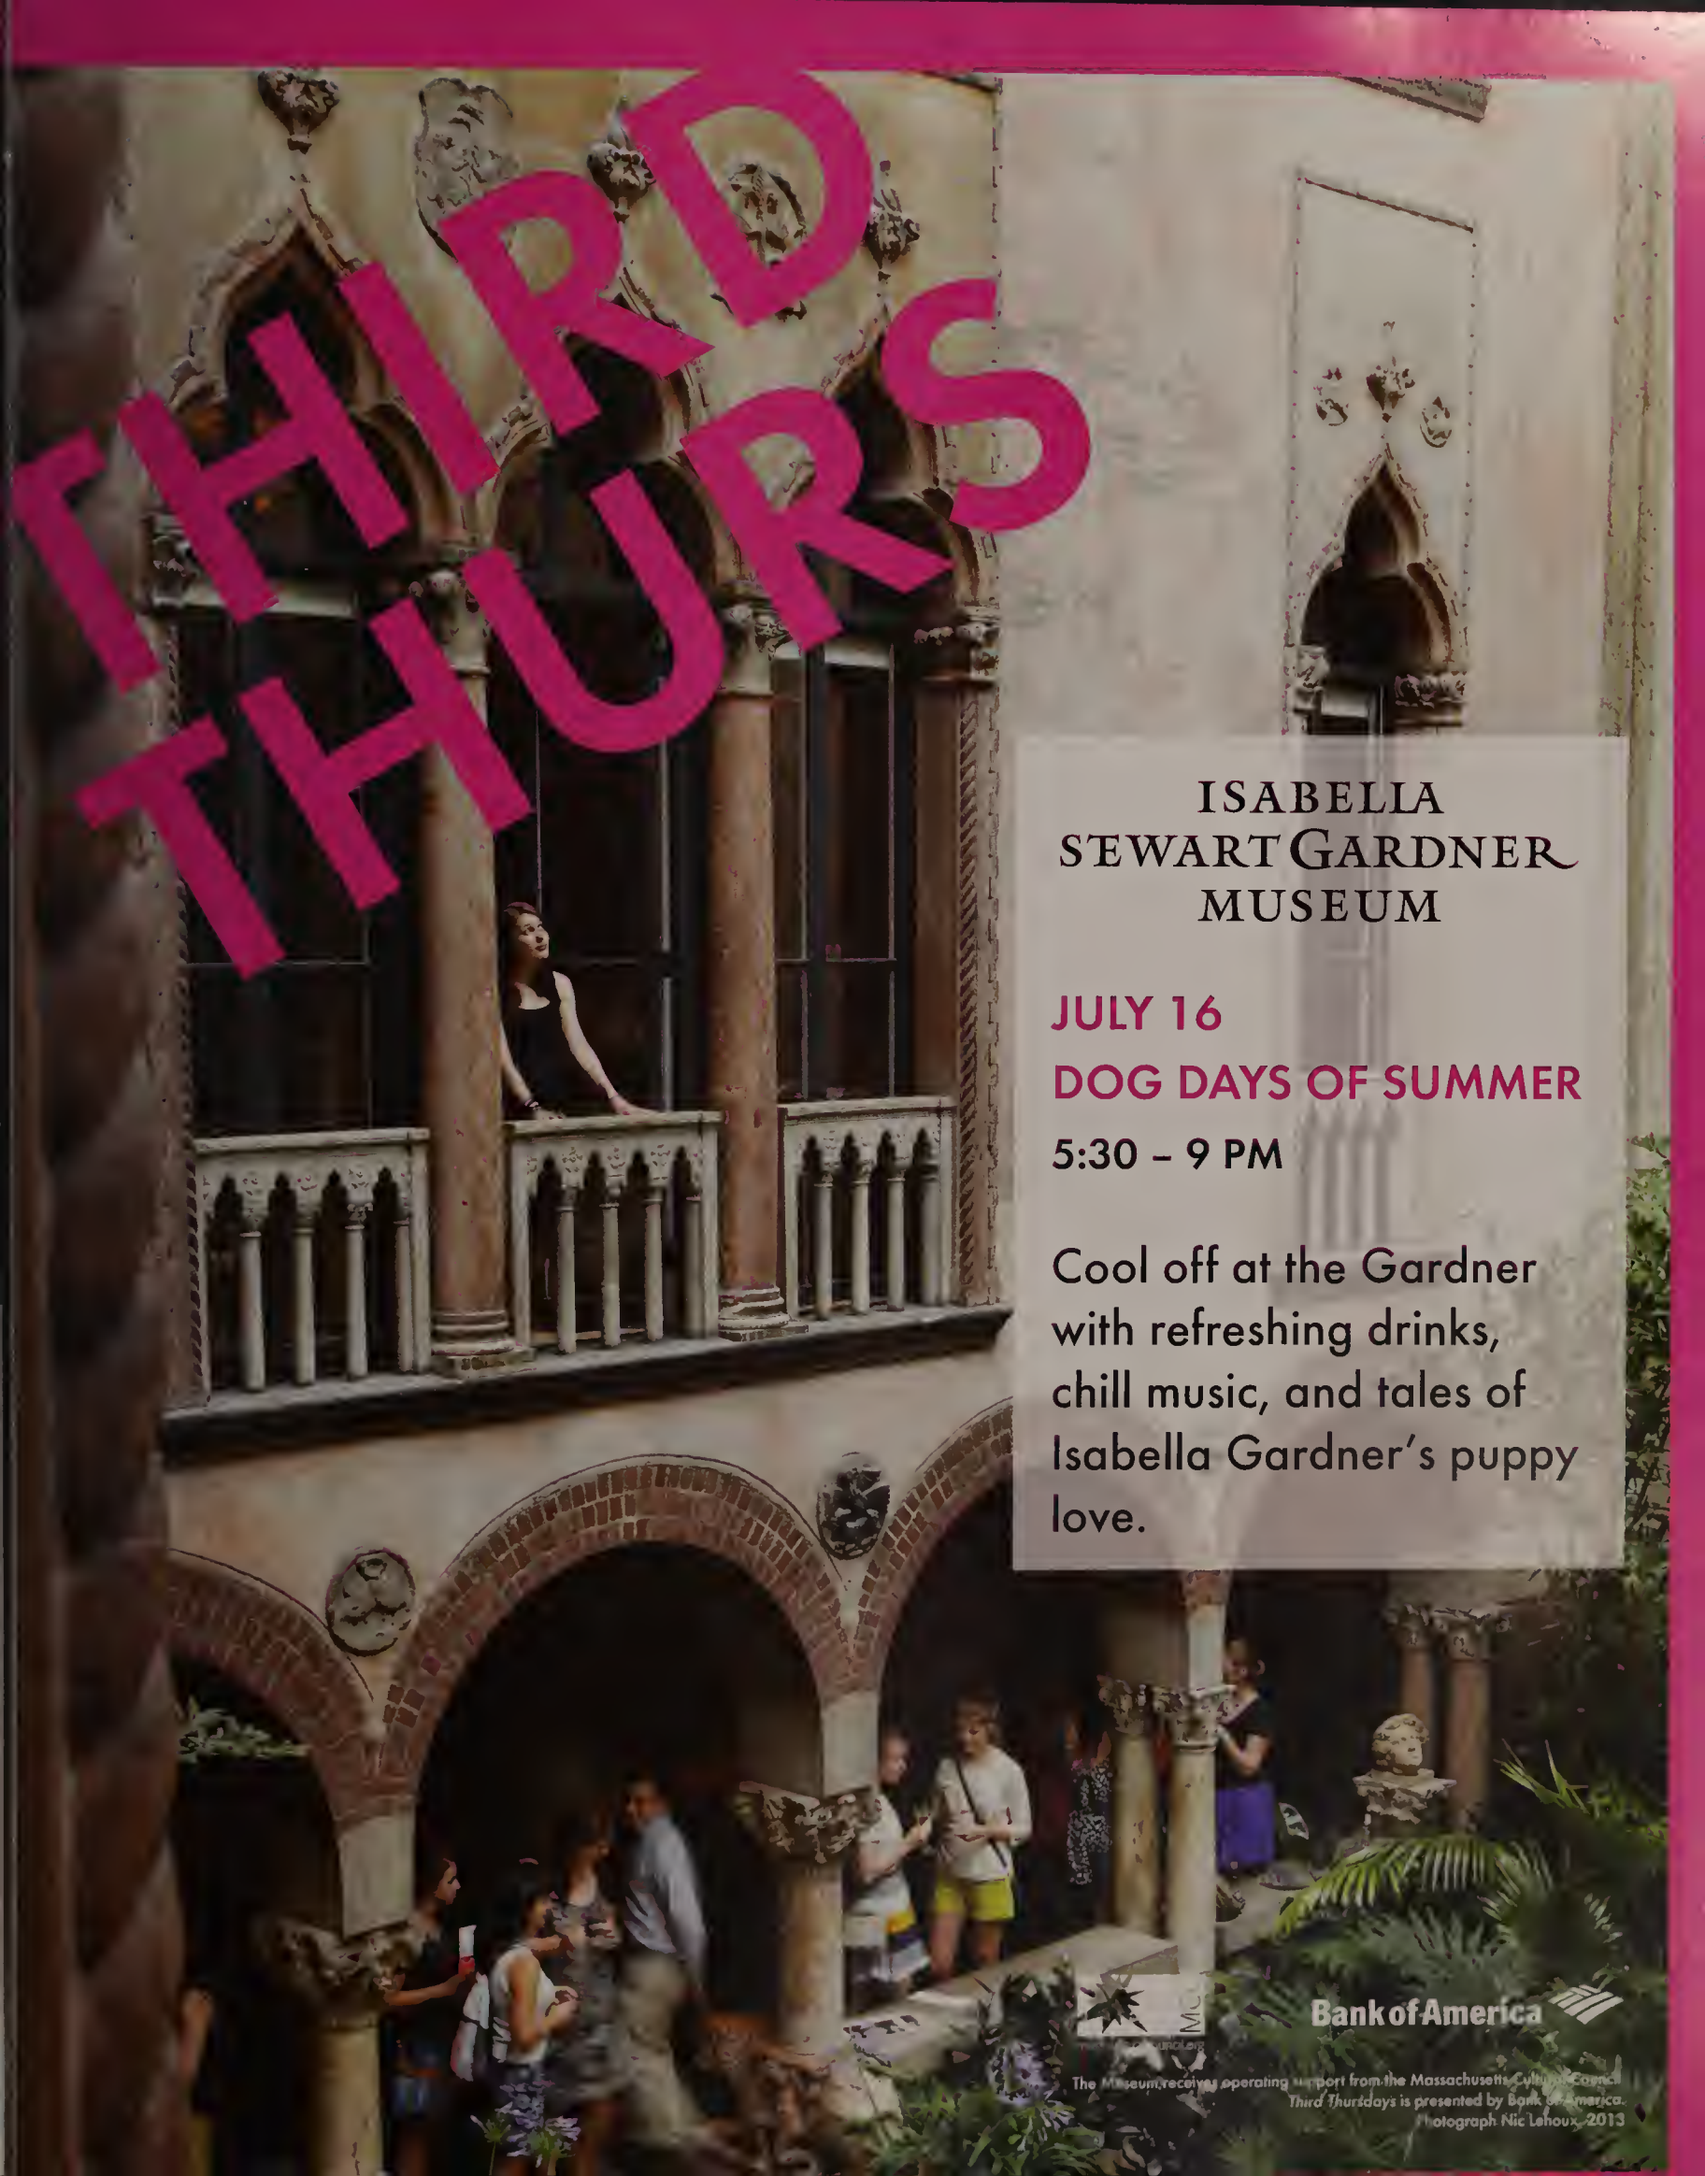
The afternoon's best remark: Upon being complimented on his cuff links, one man said, "I inherited them from my grandfather—the broke baron, not the no-account count."

PAGING MOLLY RINGWALD!

You know that an event is high-profile when you're asked to sign a release form upon entering, and with celebrity guests that included latter-day Helen of Troy Elizabeth Hurley, fashion icon Tommy Hilfiger and his handbag designer wife, Dee, news anchor Amy Robach and her actor husband, Andrew Shue, and Tony Award winner Megan Hilty, it was understandable at the Breast Cancer Research Foundation's Hot Pink Party, held at the Seaport World Trade Center.

However, the real reason for the waivers turned out to be Alma and Bobby Wahlberg, whose camera crew was filming an episode of their reality TV show, which turned out to be only a small part of a spectacle that included guys in skin-tight bubblegum-colored spandex pants on stilts and postmodern go-go dancers.

Joining the aforementioned were other boldfaced names, including Super Bowl champ Bill Belichick and the gorgeous Linda Holliday, Hillary Clinton operative Bryan Rafanelli, the alarmingly beautiful Linda Pizzuti Henry and her husband, John, investment legend Peter Lynch and his other half, Carolyn, the achingly lovely Jen Herman with the absurdly handsome Mark, Herald scribe Erica Corsano, blond bombshell Kristen Kuliga, the infectiously upbeat Erin Duggan Lynch, fashion avatar Kimmy Strauss, mom-to-be Kelley Tuthill, style guru Elisha Daniels, blond pixie Alyssa Romano, Duxbury mack daddy Frank Wisneski and one woman who greeted a friend by saying, "I can't believe we're in the same time zone!"



One guest decided to forgo a pink outfit in favor of wearing pink sapphires, which prompted yours truly to ask another guest who was wearing some impressive jewelry, "Are those pink sapphires?" To which the answer was "Sort of. They're called rubies."

Elizabeth Hurley was surprisingly gregarious for a celebrity, while Megan Hilty brought the house down, and the Hilfigers were as gracious as could be. Meanwhile, the release form had more than a few tongues wagging, especially because it asked for personal information, which prompted the following exchange:

"Did you print your real birth date?"

"Yes. But I wrote it really messy." ◆

Dream Catcher®

Legendary "Toasted" Irish Liqueur

The origins of Dream Catcher, an old Gaelic recipe, started in a historic farm house with a pot still in County Cavan, Ireland.

A farmer was inspired to blend an elixir of the natural flavor of toasted chestnuts and other superb ingredients with Premium Irish Spirits to create the taste of toasted Irish Liqueur. This wonderful treasure was discovered several years ago and is now coming to the world.

The farmer claimed it was a "Dream worth catching".

For a Great Irish Coffee

HEAR HERE!

IT WAS ONE OF THOSE SUBLIME SUMMER Fridays. The hemlines were high, the mood as buoyant as the boats bobbing in the harbor, the sky a brilliant, almost unnatural blue—as were the cocktails being sipped on the ICA's waterfront deck. And then our cover subject, Ruby Rose Fox, took the makeshift stage, unleashing a voice as dark as a thundercloud. "I'd like to play you a happy song," she said into the mic at one point. "Unfortunately, I haven't written one yet."

It takes an awful lot of talent to captivate a crowd while raining on their parade. In our cover story, Paul Robicheau gets to know Fox and nine other buzz-worthy local bands and artists, from a recently rechristened psych-surf act to folk-rockers who've gone from busking to Bonnaroo. Elsewhere, fixtures of the music scene sound off on their favorite memories of the much-loved T.T. the Bear's Place, which closes its doors this month after 31 years and one hell of a farewell blowout. And Robicheau also checks in with hip-hop trio Czarface, fresh off the release of their killer sophomore album. Meanwhile, Alexandra Cavallo hears from a baroque orchestra that performs for unexpected audiences, Matt Martinelli gets a first taste of the new izakaya at the music-themed Verb Hotel, and Jonathan Soroff interviews Tony-winning singer and actress Jessie Mueller, who's starring in a world premiere musical in Cambridge. Here's hoping this issue gives you plenty of fodder for your summer soundtrack.

HEART STRINGS

LESLIE KWAN ON L'ACADÉMIE'S HEALING MUSIC.

SOUND IDEA: L'Académie's performances have inspired enthusiastic responses, including this post-concert sketch by a patient's granddaughter.

A Different Kind of Lullaby

Harpsichordist Leslie Kwan's most fulfilling experience as a musician didn't happen in a concert hall. It took place in the Patty Ribakoff Newborn Intensive Care Unit at Mass. General, where her nonprofit baroque chamber orchestra, L'Académie, began playing intimate concerts late last year. Their audience: 18 tiny newborns and their worried parents.

"Each child has a monitor next to them, and each monitor has a central artery in the nurses' station," Kwan explains. "And while we were performing for that hour, none of the alarms went off. Not one. It was miraculous. They said it has never happened. It still gives me goose bumps just thinking about it."

L'Académie's general director has always believed in the healing properties of music. But back in 2003, when her own mother was diagnosed with stage-three non-Hodgkin lymphoma, Kwan felt helpless. "I thought it would be really great if I could bring music to her," Kwan recalls. "But the only way I could do that was loading tracks on her iPod. She was in an in-patient facility and was in the hospital for weeks at a time."

The idea of combining music and medicine coalesced a few years later, when she met a couple with connections at Dana-Farber while playing a private house concert. L'Académie had been conceived as simply an outlet for Kwan and her friends to play the music they loved, but soon, small groups of L'Académie musicians, ranging from soloists to quintets, started performing at the hospital. Kwan says the impact was immediate and profound.

"There was a little girl, I think she might have been 18 months old, that sat there with the biggest smile on her face, but she had a little banner there on her wrist that was there for her cancer treatment," she remembers. "That really changed the tone for me. We weren't just doing orchestral concerts; we were providing peace and beauty to people at a really difficult time."

As word of L'Académie's mission spread, it caught the interest of a number of donors and partners, including NICU namesake Patty Ribakoff, co-chair of Mass. General's philanthropy program. "When someone wants to do something that's so powerful and so meaningful and so impactful, it spoke to me," Ribakoff says.

L'Académie has begun tapering down their Dana-Farber concerts to focus on a partnership with MGH, where they plan to play one or two performances a month, which will be taped so patients can enjoy them in their rooms through the hospital's closed-circuit TV station. They want the series to "have legs beyond the actual 14 hours of programming," Ribakoff explains.

Kwan, whose mother is currently in remission, tears up a bit when she talks about her work. "One of the couples [in the NICU] came up to me and said, 'I'm at a loss for words as to what to say to you. This was one of the best gifts I've ever received.' So it's hard not to get emotional," she says. "I've performed all over the world, but this, for me, has been the most meaningful and powerful way of expressing what I've been gifted with." / Alexandra Cavallo

FOOD FOR THE SOUL

Local musicians aren't the only Bostonians giving back to sick kids. Boston Children's Hospital, which has been bringing in guest chefs for nearly a decade, opened Chef's Playground in its food court late last month, giving local toques such as Rachel Klein, Brian Poe and Ming Tsai a place to entertain, educate and cook for children. There's usually one chef booked for a few hours each month, but Children's Hospital senior director Shawn Goldrick is considering making the demos more frequent to accommodate the chefs clamoring to lend a hand. "The chefs always end up extending their stay," Goldrick says. "We had Tiffani Faison in here once for six hours making s'mores with the kids and teaching them how to make their own Fluff." / Matt Martinelli

ROCK-N-ROLL CALL

What's in a name? More than you'd think, which we found when we tapped some Boston bands whose monikers strike a unique chord. / Hannah Landers

WIZARD CULT
This metal band—composed of a "cult of wizards visiting this Earth from another version of reality"—conjured up its name after writing some songs about a prominent Dungeons & Dragons character.

SERVICE WITH A SMILE: Hojoko's vibe is all about fun.

READY TO ROCK

THE CUSHMANS SET THEIR SIGHTS ON HOJOKO.

Hojoko
The Verb Hotel,
1271 Boylston St., Boston
(617-670-0507)
hojokoboston.com

Tim and Nancy Cushman are synonymous with three letters in Boston: O Ya. But for Hojoko, their izakaya, or casual Japanese pub, opening in late July at the Verb Hotel, they're focused on three other letters: F-U-N.

"There's a lot of different sides to Japanese culture, but one of them is having a ton of fun. They like to go out and let loose and just kind of rock and roll. Actually, they are into rock and roll," Tim says. "It was really all that inspiration to open a really fun, high-energy, everyday type of restaurant."

Hojoko will get a dose of energy from the Verb, with floor-to-ceiling windows that open from the restaurant to the buzzing pool deck outside. The tabletops inside the 100-seat spot are a mix of brightly colored patterns and dark woods, while Japanese movie posters and album covers that the Cushmans have collected over the past five years line the walls. In keeping with the music theme, there are plans for live gigs on a small portable stage in the restaurant. Musicians will include a couple of big acts a year as well as locals, with an emphasis on students from the local music schools—something that hits home for Tim, a Berklee alum.

"Nancy's idea is to just have a triangle guy walking through the dining room," Tim jokes. "But we're going to have rock 'n' roll and all kinds of stuff."

Top billing, however, is reserved for the food. Hart Lowry, who has spent five years at O Ya, will helm the kitchen, turning out a variety of shareable plates. The menu will include sushi, sandwiches, fried food and fare cooked on a Japanese charcoal grill, such as pork and shrimp potstickers with a foie gras-umeboshi sauce, nori, sesame and yuzu powder.

There will be dozens of counter seats with views of the kitchen and the bar, which will offer a robust selection of sake, local and Japanese beer, and Old World and domestic wines. Cocktails will have a Japanese influence, with drinks such as the Tokyo Tea, which mixes tequila, lemon, green-tea syrup and bittered Midori, and the 5,6,7,8, featuring vodka, crème de violette, lemon and mango foam—and a name that nods to the Japanese band in Kill Bill. All the drinks "will have a smile," part of a relaxed vibe that offers a counterpoint to the ultra-high-end O Ya.

"Not everyone ends up going to O Ya in Boston, so we hope this is a location and a concept where literally everyone in Boston has a chance to go," Nancy says. "It's going to be a lot of fun. You just walk in and feel a great energy in there. Hopefully, we'll see smile after smile on people's faces."

THE BORED OF HEALTH
Vocalist/guitarist Marc Wolfson Pinansky didn't lose sleep coming up with this sextet's name. It came to him in a dream, he says, blending the group's "love of wordplay, humor, life and often blatant disregard for our physical well-being."

BREAK THE MOLDOVA

THE REAL THING: Artur Andronic plans to bring new flavors to Newton.

Ever been to a Moldovan restaurant? No? Well, you're about to get your chance. Moldovan native Artur Andronic is set to open Moldova Restaurant in Newton by August's end, introducing authentic Moldovan cuisine to Boston-area diners.

"It's definitely a new type of food," he says, although most of its ingredients and seasonings are likely to be familiar. Think Eastern European: beef, pork, potatoes and cabbage. Neighboring countries Romania and Ukraine, as well as Turkey and Russia, influence the fare from Moldova, which declared its independence in 1991 after the dissolution of the Soviet Union.

"We use a lot of cheese—goat cheese—in our food," Andronic explains, as in a traditional pie stuffed with cheese, potatoes, cabbage and apples. Another classic is a cornmeal dish similar to polenta. "We don't do deep-fried food," he says. Andronic, who earned his MBA at Suffolk, has hired a Moldovan chef, "a young guy with good experience," who's currently developing lunch and dinner menus for the 20-seat space.

As for Andronic's favorite Moldovan fare? "My mom's food!" When she visits, he's likely to request that she make a traditional stew, which can feature different meats (pork and rabbit are popular) as well as "onion, garlic and plain, simple spices—salt and pepper. We don't go crazy with herbs," he adds.

The restaurant is still working on obtaining a beer-and-wine license, but diners can eventually expect a wide selection of Moldovan wines. Moldova Restaurant will also serve coffee and housemade Moldovan pastries from 10 am to 9 pm.

A LOT MORE BARK

Further capitalizing on its waterfront location, The Barking Crab has added a new 40-seat patio next to its red-and-yellow tent in the shadow of the recently opened Envoy Hotel. Lobster rolls, sea breezes and city views make a fine combination—everything you could want in the summer, except for easy parking.

CHILL OUT

Ever wonder why we don't drink red wines cold? Put a bottle of cabernet on ice for an hour, pour a glass and you'll understand: All you taste is tannin. But this is the time of year when almost everything is better with a light chill. If you're outdoors, red is all you drink and you don't like alcohol fumes rising from your glass, you can cool each of these bottles down to 60 degrees (20 minutes in the fridge) and they should taste delicious and refreshing. / Sandy Block

ARTAZURI GARNACHA, NAVARRA, 2013
Spanish garnacha is a perfect summer drink. Balanced but mild in tannin, it's full of floral aromas and flavors of red currant, strawberry and raspberry. The secret to garnacha's success is high-elevation, low-yielding vineyards, such as those in the Pyrenees foothills of Navarra. Fresh, juicy and balanced, this is an irresistible red wine to go with fish.
$11, Cambridge Wine & Spirits

THE WOLFTRAP, WESTERN CAPE, 2014
A largely syrah-based blend with mourvedre and a dash of viognier from one of South Africa's least pronounceable wineries (Boekenhoutskloof), this wine is fresh, ripe and slightly smoky. Full of red raspberry, with undertones of plum and an interesting mocha-like note on the finish, this goes great with barbecue.
$11, Blanchards Wines & Spirits, Boston

JEAN-PAUL BRUN, "TERRES DOREES" MORGON, 2013
This estate-bottled Cru Beaujolais offers a layered, medium-textured taste of ripe cherry flavors, tart acids and earthy stone fruit notes. There are subtle hints of baking spice and a charming brightness that lingers into the finish. This pick is great with a goat cheese salad
$23, Cambridge Wine & Spirits

FAMILLE PERRIN, CÔTES DU RHÔNE VILLAGES, 2012
Produced with organic grapes by the family that makes the legendary Château Beaucastel Châteauneuf du Pape, this wine features red pepper and wild berry flavors. Creamy in texture and medium to full in body, it has a mellow fruit profile that makes it a perfect match for grilled burgers.
$16, Blanchards Wines & Spirits, Boston

OKRA, GO: The Frogmore's grilled okra retains its snap.

Good Eats: Wanting 'More

If you only know okra as a gooey gumbo thickener, a pickle or simply another fry job, you owe it to yourself to order the grilled version at The Frogmore. At the recently opened Jamaica Plain restaurant, the whole spears (sourced locally when possible) take a turn over fire until they develop delicate char and subtle smokiness, but retain every bit of their fresh snap and interior caviar-like crunch. Tossed with chopped field tomatoes and bits of sweet cipollini onions, it offers a fresh and simple profile that co-owner Alex Homans says showcases the restaurant's Lowcountry style. / Elizabeth Bomze

Q&A
FOREVER ACES

On July 26 Pedro Martinez will become the second Dominican-born player inducted into the National Baseball Hall of Fame. Two days later, the former Red Sox ace will have his No. 45 retired at Fenway Park. He took a break from writing his induction speech to answer a few questions. / Scott Lauber

YOUR FIRST MINOR-LEAGUE PITCHING COACH, GUY CONTI, CALLS YOU A "BORDERLINE GENIUS." WHAT DO YOU THINK HE MEANS? What he means is that I was a great student of everything, not just the game. I remember I had a dictionary that I got as a gift from a Bostonian that was my teacher in the Dominican at the [Dodgers'] academy. I called Guy Conti my "white daddy," and [his wife] Jan is my "white mom." I still have the same feel for Guy, the same respect. But he would take that dictionary and he would make me use it for real. He would give me words every day to spell.... He knew I was eager to learn, eager to study. It didn't matter if I got in trouble. I wanted to learn what it was like. I remember being on the bus in Great Falls [Montana], and one of the guys from California goes, "Pedro, let me teach you a new word." He made me stick my head out the window, and he goes, "Tell those two girls, 'Nice boobs.'" I was like, "Nice boobs, girls," and they were like, "Thank you, asshole," and gave me the middle finger. But that was a lesson to learn, you know?

RED SOX GENERAL MANAGER BEN CHERINGTON ONCE SAID HE HEARD YOU PUT YOURSELF IN THE BULLPEN FOR THE FAMOUS GAME 5 OF THE 1999 ALDS. TRUE? It is exactly the way he said it. I remember coming to [manager] Jimy [Williams] when I saw Bret Saberhagen, a veteran in probably his last year, just leaving it all out there. He was taking a lot of pills and stuff to try to just pitch one inning or two innings. I got desperate. That day I asked Jimy, "Can I do something?" And he goes, "No, Pedro. My orders are that you're going to pitch maybe 18 to 20 pitches at the end of the game." I saw the game was 8-8 in the third inning. I said, "No, Jimy, I need to do something for the team now. Please allow me to do that." He goes, "No, I'm going to lose my job if I do that." I said, "I'm sorry, Jimy, for your job, but I've got to go."... I had to pretty much overthrow Jimy's rules. I have respect for whatever decision he had to make, but at that point, I was more committed to my teammates and the people than to my career.

A CHANGEUP: YOUR FAVORITE BOSTON RESTAURANT? If I say one, they're going to go bananas. I'm going to have to give you three: Brasserie JO in the Colonnade, Strega and Abe & Louie's.

IN YOUR RECENTLY PUBLISHED BIOGRAPHY, YOU ADMIT 90 PERCENT OF THE BATTERS YOU HIT WERE ON PURPOSE. REALLY? That's right. I would say 90 percent were in retaliation because whenever you hit one of mine, I needed to get one of yours. I'm not afraid to say that, and I'm not afraid to teach that either. I'm not suggesting that you need to hit people, but if you have to protect your teammates, do it

Henry Manice and Naveen Pawar love talking about squirrels—but don't think they're nuts. Wanting a more substantial post-tennis match brew, the former medical industry co-workers developed Mighty Squirrel, a craft beer launched last month with 5 grams of protein, retained "through a special recipe and process we developed in the kitchen," Manice explains. Featuring notes of citrus and honey, the final product offers one more reason to push through that finish line—stay tuned for news of weekly Squirrel Runs in the city. / Meghan Kavanaugh

FAMILY TIES AND TWISTS

DOMESTIC DRAMA UNFOLDS AT A SUMMER HOME IN A NEW BEACH READ

The Summer of Good Intentions* by Wendy Francis
Published by Simon & Schuster, 320 pages, $15

THE THREE HERINGTON SISTERS' ROUTINE has had the pleasing smoothness of a well-groomed golf course—since childhood, they've spent summers at the family house on Cape Cod. But now, suddenly, there's a sand trap: After 46 years of marriage, their parents have divorced, leaving Maggie, Jess and Virgie in charge of the house, their parents visitors.

In her second novel, local author Wendy Francis follows the summer's ups and downs. Mother Gloria arrives with her new boyfriend in tow while dad Arthur is still there. Cheerfully self-centered, she and the beau proceed to skinny-dip in his presence, leaving Arthur the sad man out. What's more, his memory is growing fuzzy, and, seemingly clinging to what remains, he's started hoarding junk. Fortunately, Arthur has a close connection to his youngest daughter, Virgie—but she too, it turns out, is facing some troubling medical symptoms. Her siblings have their own dramas: Middle sister Jess responds to her husband's detachment by flirting with a neighbor, while eldest sister Maggie frets over her children growing up too quickly, leading her to contemplate foster parenthood. Shifting focus chapter by chapter, from Maggie to Virgie to Jess to Arthur and back, Francis weaves a tale of love, loss and repair, offering comforting themes and lessons about avoiding the mistakes of our parents.

FROM PAGE 235: Perhaps Arthur had been coaching her for this moment all along. Life was made up of individual lines of music, a person's lifetime a mere collection of moments. But it was what a person did with those moments, those discoveries, how she wove them together, that made for the symphony. MS was but one melody playing in Virgie's life at the moment. In fact, it had probably been playing for some time. She just hadn't been listening. ◆

A car isn't essential: The Winnetu runs a complimentary shuttle service to Edgartown's Main Street, and taxis are plentiful. Plus, the resort will pick you up from the Oak Bluffs ferry if you reserve your crossing through the pre-arrival concierge.

During off-peak weeks, the Dunes may not be open daily, and there is no room service. Sandwiches are, however, available in the shop.

HOME SUITE HOME: The accommodations include cottages (top and left), suites and studios, all with access to the pool.

VINEYARD TIMES

THE WINNETU OCEANSIDE RESORT IS A FAMILY AFFAIR.

THE SCENE IS SUMMERTIME. A DECK chair aslant to the sun, the chink of ice, bugs twirling idly in the gauzy afternoon. Children wreak their havoc, but the lawn is long and green and well-padded, so their squeals fade into the reassuring sigh of trees. A slash of blue beyond a knotty line of scrub hints at the ocean, as does the tang of brine. The date could be anytime in the past hundred years. What's consistent is the summer.

New Englanders cherish images like this in the deep traps of their memories. And, as advertisers have long shown us, nostalgia is a powerful driver of consumer spending. That's why we like to book vacations that we hope will recapture the haze of youth, or that might even give our children a few sepia memories of their own. Joy shouldn't be an emotion they solely associate with digital screens. That's why we have Martha's Vineyard.

The Winnetu Oceanside Resort is designed to cultivate idyllic summertime memories (full disclosure: Dan Scully, the Winnetu's affable general manager, was once this writer's boss). Set on the lower right corner of the island, the site has been a holiday resort since 1874, attracting generations of vacationers with its south-facing beach. Daylong sunshine and cooling ocean breezes were such a popular draw that the place had its own railway stop in the 19th century, linking it to the ferry in Oak Bluffs. The current hotel dates to 2000, and while the gray shingles evoke the traditions of the island, the property boasts a streak of whimsy. If you enjoy antique firetruck rides and s'mores toasted beside a life-size chess set, this is a perfect backdrop.

Since the Winnetu's raison d'etre is the family vacation, accommodations are scaled accordingly. There's a choice for any family, no matter how sizable the brood. Suites have kitchenettes or even full kitchens, sofa beds are everywhere, and private cottages might sport gas grills and dining rooms. But you don't go to Martha's Vineyard to linger indoors.

The Winnetu's biggest attraction is still the beach that once drew so many Victorians in flannel pantaloons. It's a seemingly endless stretch of fine, pale sand against a lively surf. The locals flock there, especially the neighborhood plovers. Alternatively, you can swim in the resort's two pools—the one on the main grounds is built for lounging, while the larger one, by the Activities Center across the street, is better for laps. There are lots of ways to sweat—tennis courts, outdoor yoga classes—but the most appealing is the simplest. Hop on a bike and start exploring the island's web of scenic cycling paths.

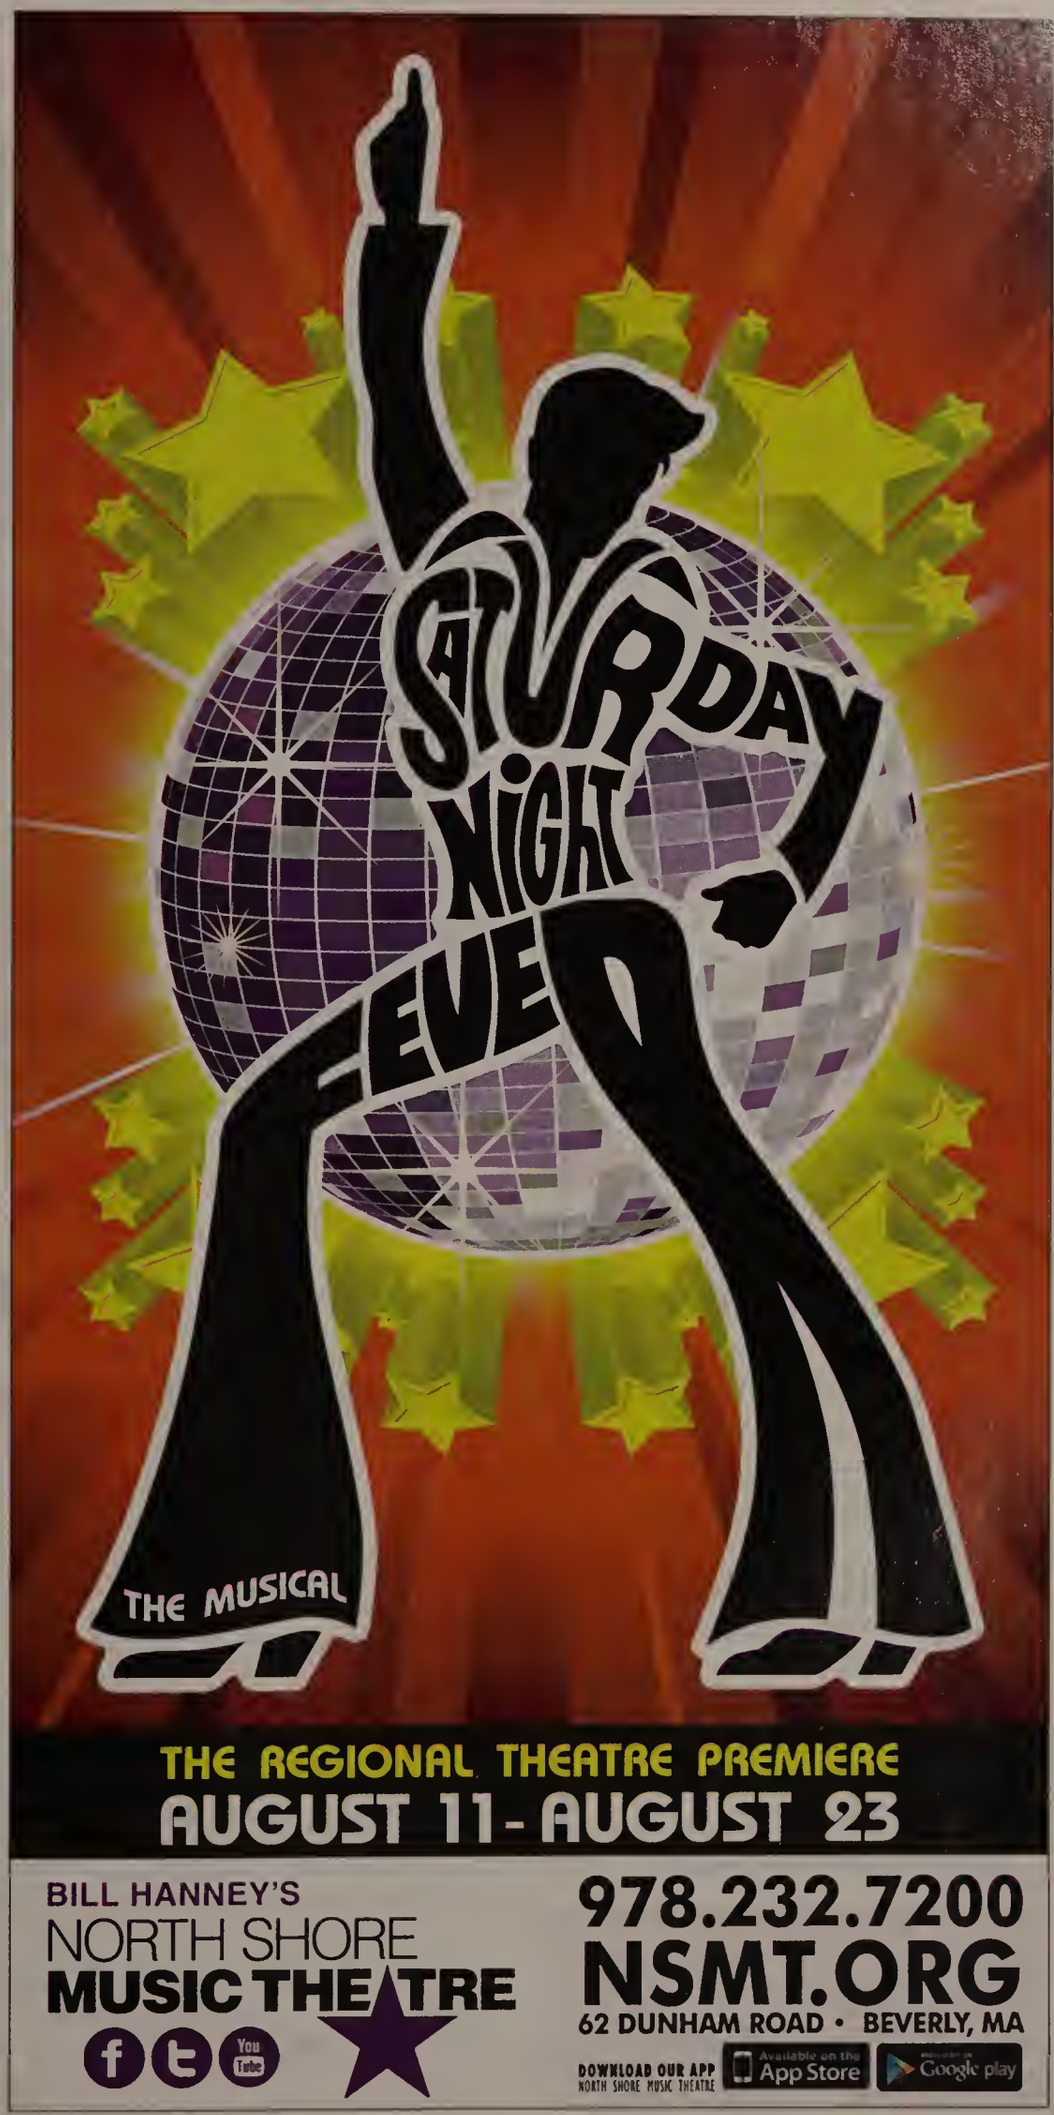
That Activities Center is the staging ground for the resort's extremely developed children's programs. You can drop the kids off during both mornings and evenings, knowing that they'll return exhausted from a schedule of water sports, treasure hunts, pirate games and the bellicose-sounding "Beach Conquest." There's even a teaching farm next door, in case your kids like to handle livestock.



This family orientation extends to the newly remodeled restaurant, the Dunes. Much could be written about its relaxed elegance, the view of the southern coast from the second-story deck, the chef's deft hand with an herb-roasted codfish or a char-grilled filet, the sterling lobster pot pie. But there's something more innovative to note. The restaurant has a completely separate play area for kids. And it's supervised. This means that when Junior gets bored of his mac 'n' cheese, Mom and Dad can savor their meal without having to suffer.

Of course, the Winnetu's charms are largely dependent on weather, so when the rain gods are generous, head three miles up the road—passing a lawn full of llamas owned by Ernie Boch—to Edgartown's center. It's a warren of whaling-era architecture, narrow streets and places to spend money on polo shirts and ice cream. Take a stroll along the waterfront, watching the boats nestle against the pier. Afterward, nip into the Newes from America, a 1742 pub, for impressive fare in front of the open hearth. Sometimes all you need for a lasting memory is good beer and an outstanding bowl of chowder. ◆

PALACE COUP

DUMPLING PALACE BOOSTS A BACK BAY BUDGET RESTAURANT ROW.

DUMPLING PALACE
179 Mass. Ave., Boston
(617-266-8888)
dumplingpalace boston.com

SOMETHING STRANGE IS HAPPENING ALONG the stretch of Mass. Ave. between the South End and the Charles River: Low-end dining is becoming unterrible. Blocks once dotted with bottom-feeder restaurants that only frugal (or very stoned) college students could love—exemplified by the cheap, greasy, American-sorta-Chinese dump that was Nan Ling—now feature much better budget eats, with the likes of Chef Chang's and InBoston complementing previously lonely standouts like Pho Basil. The most dramatic upgrade yet might be the brand-new Dumpling Palace, which replaced Nan Ling and is exorcising its execrable memory with excellent traditional Taiwanese food.

If its long menu looks familiar, that's because Dumpling Palace is the sibling of Chinatown's outstanding Dumpling Cafe and carefully recreates many of its signature dishes, including Shanghainese soup dumplings, a.k.a. mini juicy buns with pork ($7.50) or pork and crabmeat ($7.75). Eat carefully to avoid scalding: Gently lift one of these delicate beauties from its steamer basket, bite the top off, carefully slurp out the hot broth and eat the rest with black vinegar/ginger dip. (We gave these a Boston's Best award again in 2015 for a reason. Do not miss them.) Vegetarians will enjoy mini parsley dumplings ($7.75), smaller, simpler steamed dumplings with a traditional soy sauce/rice wine dip. Taiwan-style grilled anchovies ($7.50) are another straightforward winner: two large, meaty, grilled whole specimens with a lightly sweet glaze, easily filleted with just your chopsticks.

Influences from the coastal Chinese mainland (like Guangdong and Fujian provinces) crop up in fine seafood dishes like clam with basil ($13.95), a dozen-and-a-half small shore clams in the shell in a light brown sauce with lots of slivered fresh basil, and salt and pepper shrimp with head ($12.95), in which whole shrimp are skillfully fried in a light batter and served with julienned fresh longhorn peppers. (This is the easiest path imaginable to eating whole shrimp, which are much tastier than the headless, though the timid can order them without.) The influence of famously spicy Sichuan cuisine pops up in Szechuan-style flounder ($14.95), a bubbling pot of tender fillets in a crimson sauce with the one-two punch of dried red capsicum chilies and numbing-hot Sichuan peppercorns.

Meat dishes are generously sized and very reasonably priced, as in beef with potatoes and longhorn pepper ($12.95), a tangy/sweet stir-fry centered on shredded al dente potatoes. Chicken leg with three essences in hot pot ($11.50), a benchmark dish of Taiwanese cuisine, boasts roughly chopped bone-in thighs with a rich, caramel sauce of soy, sesame oil and rice wine; just watch out for small bones. Lamb with cabbage in clay pot ($15.95) subbed the advertised cabbage for heaps of big, crunchy mung bean sprouts on one visit and delivers powerful, fatty, slightly gamy lamb flavor. Taiwan-style pork liver ($10.95) bedecks thin strips of very tender, barely medium liver with a lot of ginger, bok choy, scallions and leeks, a gorgeous and subtle treatment that should tantalize even the offal-averse.

The roster of noodle dishes includes Taiwan-style rice cake with veggies and pork ($8.95), the delightfully chewy gnocchi-like disks of rice-flour pasta, and Fuzhou-style rice noodles ($7.95), a light but satisfying plate of spaghetti-like white noodles with mushrooms, scallions and scrambled egg in a mild sauce. Braised beef brisket noodles soup with spinach ($7.50) is probably best enjoyed as a one-course meal in a bowl: a choice of noodles (like the spaghetti-like wheat-based Shanghai noodles) in a rich, blood-red, fiery beef broth loaded with chilies, the deep umami smack of Sichuan chili-bean sauce, accents of star anise, ginger and Sichuan peppercorns, floating leaves of spinach, minced pickled greens and slices of fabulously fatty and tender brisket. It's a deeply satisfying, wonderfully restorative dish.

Dumpling Palace is more limited for drinks than its Chinatown sibling, with bubble tea ($3.95), soft drinks ($1.50), individual cups of hot tea ($1.25) and no beer. The kitchen also falls short in a couple of spots, notably in pan-fried dishes like a roast beef with scallion pancake ($7.75), where a slightly too-thick pancake makes the dish drier than optimal, or a pan-fried chives with clear noodle pocket ($3.95) that gets the filling right but trades the glutinous chew of the advertised wrapper for ordinary wheat-flour dough. But these feel like quibbles given the menu's extraordinary length, overall consistency of execution, regional breadth and attractive prices, including a three-course combo meal ($22.95) with 56 choices that is available from 11 am to 4 pm, a steal.

The bright, plain, spotless room features very friendly, attentive service and for some reason nonstop Tchaikovsky on the stereo, perhaps a nod to the nearby music schools. Come to think of it, it's not just long-suffering Back Bay residents who need more superb, high-value restaurants like Dumpling Palace: Concertgoers on their way to or from Symphony Hall, the Berklee Performance Center and Jordan Hall ought to be singing a hallelujah chorus too. ◆

ASK CHERYL

Q: WHAT DO YOU RECOMMEND FOR SUNSCREEN?

A: I founded SkinHealth in 1999 as a result of my sister dying of melanoma, the most deadly form of skin cancer, at the age of 40. My goal is to help prevent melanoma deaths by providing the best sun protection possible. Subsequently, one of our SkinHealth sunscreens has been selected by Health Magazine as the best in the country!

I am a firm believer in using a physical barrier in sunscreens to shield our skin from damaging radiation. My preference is micronized zinc oxide, which is invisible on the skin and deflects damaging UVA rays. I recommend using a broad spectrum UVA/UVB sunscreen that is at least SPF 30 SPF, and contains a minimum of 5% zinc oxide.

At SkinHealth we have created a variety of sunscreens that have a high SPF and contain between 5% to 17% zinc oxide. These are invisible on the skin, water resistant, and unlike many other sunscreens, contain no fragrance and are not greasy. Please stop into a SkinHealth Center and select a sunscreen that is right for you, or shop online at: www.shopskinhealth.com.

BOXED IN

A ROTE SCRIPT PUSHES GYLLENHAAL'S PRIZE PERFORMANCE AGAINST THE ROPES.

SOUTHPAW* ★★½

Starring Jake Gyllenhaal, Rachel McAdams, Oona Laurence, Curtis "50 Cent" Jackson, Beau Knapp, Naomie Harris, Miguel Gómez, Skylan Brooks, Victor Ortiz, Dominic Colon, Malcolm Mays, Rita Ora and Forest Whitaker. Written by Kurt Sutter and Richard Wenk, based on a story by Sutter. Directed by Antoine Fuqua. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

HARVEY WEINSTEIN REALLY WANTS Jake Gyllenhaal to win an Academy Award. Certainly, the producer/distributor has a knack for shepherding films and performers toward Oscar gold, and the 34-year-old actor has been steadily building a stellar body of work since garnering his first (and only) nomination for Brokeback Mountain a decade ago. Last year alone, the talented thespian delivered knockout performances in both the little-seen thriller Enemy and Nightcrawler, a darkly comic indictment of the media's lack of ethics. The latter role included a physical transformation in which Gyllenhaal dropped 30 pounds, causing his eyes to pop from his gaunt, haunted face. It was a wonderfully cerebral, wormy performance, and it was snubbed during Oscar season.

With the Weinstein Company's latest release, director Antoine Fuqua's Southpaw, Gyllenhaal performs literal knockouts, bulking up to portray the fictional Light Heavyweight Champion of the World. His anger-prone Billy "The Great" Hope pursues a strategy of pure offense, taking a beating as his opponents wear themselves down, only to unleash his destructive left hook, even as his perennially bloody right eye threatens to see no more.

Billy's rock is his wife Maureen (Rachel McAdams, also deserving of more acclaim—and better projects). The only one able to quell his rages, she's been at his side since she was 12, when both were wards of a Hell's Kitchen orphanage. Now, they live in luxury, inhabiting a New York mansion with their bright and extraordinarily well-adjusted young daughter, Leila (11-year-old newcomer Oona Laurence).

The morning after the Madison Square Garden prizefight that opens the film, Maureen "lays down the truth" to Billy, warning that he could end up "punch-drunk" if he doesn't call it quits on his career. Alas, he's also fiercely loyal to his lifelong friend and manager, Jordan Mains (Curtis "50 Cent" Jackson), who's anxious to get Billy to defend his title, perhaps against Miguel Escobar (Miguel Gómez), a thuggish showboater who interrupted the previous evening's post-fight press conference with his baiting boasts.

Escobar turns up again at a children's charity event held at a hotel in Manhattan, where Billy delivers a speech about overcoming childhood hardships. Given that the script by Kurt Sutter (creator of television's Sons of Anarchy) trades in melodramatic tropes that have been around since at least 1931, the year that King Vidor's Oscar-winning Wallace Beery/Jackie Cooper boxing vehicle The Champ punched its way into cinemas, tragedy strikes as Billy and Maureen quietly exit the gala through the hotel's lobby. The silence is broken as Escobar baits the champion prizefighter once again, crudely insulting Maureen, who unsuccessfully attempts to calm Billy. Fists fly, a lone gunshot rings out and Maureen crumples onto the carpet, a crimson pool forming by her abdomen, coughing up even more blood as she dies in her distraught husband's arms. Hope is lost.

[Maureen warns] that he could end up "punch-drunk" if he doesn't call it quits on his career.

Eight weeks later, prodded by Mains, Billy returns to the ring. The announcers rightly describe the fight as a "bloodletting," where the shell of a man not only doesn't defend himself, but refuses to even throw any punches. When a ref tries to call the fight, Billy responds by head-butting him. In the aftermath, Billy's banned from professional boxing for a year, and without any income or Maureen to watch over him, he loses everything: his fair-weather manager, his money, his cars, his home—and most devastatingly, his daughter, who's taken away by family services.

It all happens very fast. Too fast, as if Sutter attempted to cram a TV season's worth of developments into his first feature screenplay. And like The Champ, Fuqua's film becomes centered on a custody battle. But since this movie is structured as a rise-fall-rise-again redemption story for Billy, the extremely gifted Laurence is used as little more than a prop in the paint-by-numbers script that places Leila under the supervision of Angela Rivera, a social worker played by Naomie Harris (the modern Moneypenny to Daniel Craig's James Bond). She's given little to do but act concerned during Billy's visits with his daughter, who actually has to deliver the line "I wish you died instead of Mom!"

And I wish the screenplay focused less on training montages and more on developing the bond between father and daughter, as well as that between Billy and Titus "Tick" Wills (Oscar winner Forest Whitaker), a gruff retired fighter who reluctantly becomes Billy's new trainer. Tick refuses to train anyone who doesn't follow the rules of his run-down gym: no drug or alcohol abuse, nor any swearing. Mind you, Tick's no saint; as Billy learns, he doesn't exactly practice what he preaches. Predictably, the two gradually win each other's respect. "My wife would have liked you," Billy tells Tick, who's not thrilled that Billy's headed back to the ring in what's being touted as the ultimate revenge match in Vegas, with our pugilist hero squaring off against Escobar, the new reigning champion, now managed by Mains.

Fuqua, who brought out the darkness in Denzel Washington when he directed the actor toward an Oscar in Training Day, does the same with Gyllenhaal here. Alas, the foundation behind Billy's light heavyweight champ is far more lightweight than heavy. ◆ BOOM-BAP!

LOCAL HIP-HOP VETERANS TEAM WITH WU-TANG ACE FOR COMICS-INSPIRED ACTION.

Growing up in Beverly, Seamus Ryan devoured old Marvel and DC comic books from the '60s and '70s to savor the exploits of superheroes. Then he immersed himself in hip-hop as a late-'80s teenager and started rapping as Esoteric a decade later, joining forces with 7L, the DJ moniker of Peabody native George Andrinopoulos.

Now both worlds collide in Czarface, a group that 7L and Esoteric formed a few years ago after six albums as a duo, drafting rapper Inspectah Deck from New York's Wu-Tang Clan to tackle a fresh, collaborative challenge.

"It definitely sparked new life into what we're doing," Andrinopoulos says. And when the new trio needed a name, Ryan reached back to comic book memories. He came up with an ironclad, caped crusader named Czarface, whose laser-eyed visage commands the comics-styled covers of the group's self-titled 2013 debut and more assured June 16 release, Every Hero Needs a Villain.

"Our exaggerated egos on the record and the cartoonish violence that we put in the rhymes are inspired by that stuff that we grew up on," Ryan says. "Most kids, when they start out and start finding their confidence, they're looking at superheroes, and then start looking at rappers and people in the music industry. A lot of rappers, dating back to the '80s, take their B-boy stance with their arms folded, and that's how Superman stands when he lands."

Czarface himself springs to life in a 25-page comic that Ryan wrote for the deluxe packaging of Every Hero Needs a Villain, zapping bullies out of their polo shirts and pounding trigger-happy cops. "He can be a hero to some, a villain to others," Ryan says. "Kind of like hip-hop artists in general. They can be polarizing figures."

Deck certainly brings a fearsome reputation from Wu-Tang, but he makes an ideal rapping foil for Esoteric. "Nothing will be as grandiose and legendary as Wu-Tang, but this is something that's just fresh and fun to do, with him and I locking horns," Ryan says. "We kind of look at it like a friendly competition."

"Most kids, when they start out and start finding their confidence, they're looking at superheroes."

He and Deck also fit the project's superhero theme as they engage in fiery battle raps. "Cock back the hammer, watch me lay 'em down. Czarface, the villains, we don't play around," Deck spits in the triple tradeoff "Lumberjack Match," answered by Esoteric lines like "I maintain my fly side, cultivate my grimy one, you can call for help but you'll be dead by 9-1..."

In rhyme, however, Deck and Esoteric don't assume roles of characters, but rather generally represent the bold spirit of Czarface. "This is the imagery that would run through your mind if you're listening to the album, like Czarface is running through the city, taking down buildings, saving kids and overthrowing authority," Ryan says. "When we're talking about Czarface on the album, we're talking about how nobody can compete with us in terms of the music we're putting out."

The rappers ride ominous old-school tracks by 7L and jazz and classically trained co-producer Todd Spadafore, and Esoteric gave scripts to voice actors to prepare dialogue interludes for 7L. "He'll EQ until it sounds like an old cartoon," Ryan says. "There are a few that we sample, but there are several that we just created and made them sound like they were taken off an old VHS tape."

Now Czarface shifts to the stage for one of its rare live shows, a July 25 album release party Downstairs at the Middle East with R.A. the Rugged Man (one of several guests on Every Hero Needs a Villain, which also sports MF Doom, Large Professor and Deck's Wu-Tang mates Method Man and GZA). Deck flies out the day after that show to perform with Wu-Tang in the U.K., Ryan says (and at least Esoteric and 7L will also man a Czarface booth during Boston Comic Con at the Seaport World Trade Center from July 31 to Aug. 2).

As the DJ, 7L has a prime view of Czarface's live attack. "Once you hit onstage, there's a chemistry that happens," Andrinopoulos says. "You just go with the flow." ◆

BURNED ON THE BEACH

JUST WHEN I THOUGHT A VACATION COULDN'T GET ANY WORSE...

MY ANNUAL WEEK OF SUMMER vacation is always beset by some degree of calamity. Two years ago, I dropped my new iPhone in the street and it got run over about 2,000 times. Last year, my father-in-law broke his big toe playing soccer on the beach. This year? I drove about a half-hour away from my house and realized I forgot my running shoes. Perhaps the vacation gods were telling me to chill out and relax. Slow down. Wear flip-flops for a week. Hey, forgetting a pair of shoes isn't the worst thing that could happen. Which was definitively proven, again and again and again, during the next week, as worse things happened on an hourly basis.

Here's a short catalog of unfortunate vacation events: I lost my $500 GoPro in the ocean, burned my leg with boat-cleaning acid, dodged errant fireworks, fought with birds in the house, sucked a towrope into a Sea-Doo jet intake and lacerated my finger on a Chinese beach cart that carried the warning "Watch your hand when fold the cart!" The full moon meant that the beach disappeared at high tide and retreated halfway to the Azores at low tide, lacing the breeze with a pungent bouquet of decaying mollusk farts. My wife got a speeding ticket, and my friend Elliot stepped on a flounder after I ran my boat aground on a mud flat. Which at least meant the boat was running that day, which wasn't always the case. Oh, and I sprayed gasoline in my eyes, but not till the day I got home, so technically I can't blame that on vacation.

In retrospect, most of my problems derive from the fact that I get bored at the beach, so I bring as many elaborate diversions as possible. Most of these consist of serious equipment that can break down, maim you or both. Like the boat, which decided to manifest a fuel problem that would cause it to intermittently cut out and leave us drifting while I frantically pumped the fuel bulb. One day, a guy pulled alongside and offered to help. Noting his functioning Yamaha outboard, I said, "Maybe I need to get a Yamaha." He cast a glance back and replied, "Doesn't matter what you have. They all do it sooner or later." Spoken like a man who's had a lot of boats.

Incidentally, that wisdom also applies to running aground, which I did about 20 minutes later. Elliot and I hopped out to push, sinking to our knees in black mud. We couldn't see the bottom, but at one point Elliot declared, "I'm pretty sure I just stepped on something that was trying to get away." I told him he probably just slipped on a flounder. As one does when out enjoying the water.

Other challenges came from the Sea-Doos. I was shooting a video on them, combining a little bit of work and play. If you've never ridden a Sea-Doo, it's like saddling up a playful bionic dolphin but with more of a learning curve. A dolphin, for instance, would never inhale the towrope for a ski tube, which is what the Sea-Doo did as I idled in front of the beach to pick up nieces and nephews for a ride. Apparently, there's a shaft spinning under the back of the thing even when you're in neutral. So that's how I found myself diving beneath a 900-pound watercraft, clutching a sheriff's borrowed pocketknife and hacking at an unseen rope as rolling surf threatened to take the whole thing airborne and drop it on my head. To further enliven the scene, my niece on the beach was yelling that she saw a shark, and the sheriff was getting impatient to get his knife back before I dropped it or inadvertently stabbed myself—both strong possibilities. Oh, and the kids on the beach who weren't yelling about sharks were complaining about the inequitable distribution of tube rides resulting from my poor stewardship of the towrope. How inconsiderate of me! This might have been the moment that I spawned a persona that Heather dubbed "Grumpy Uncle."

This might have been the moment that I spawned a persona that Heather dubbed "Grumpy Uncle."

The good news: I got the whole scene on video, shot from my new GoPro Hero4 setup—suction mount, waterproof float door, 32 gig memory card. Sweet. The bad news? That footage will be screening exclusively at Davy Jones' Locker, since the camera fell off somewhere out in the ocean on my way back to the dock. Now, there's a chance it floated—I never tested the buoyancy of the foam door—but even if it did, we're talking about a small orange blot in the vastness of the sea. Of course, I looked for it, riding around long enough to get a really cool sunburn in a pattern that I call "invisible life jacket."

So, to recap: I spent a week at the beach doing very little work. Can't wait till next year! ◆

SOUND ADVICE ON GOLF ETIQUETTE, DREAM JOBS AND DINNER DISASTERS

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

A couple of my friends nominated me for membership in a private golf club. I love the sport but I'm a terrible player. Part of the screening process is that I have to play 18 holes with two members of the admissions committee, so they can check me out. I'm terrified of completely blowing my chances. Any tricks of the trade here? Sadly, we are always being tested in life. Job interviews, club admissions—people never stop passing judgment on us.

When playing with the two club members, remember that it is much more important to know the etiquette of golf than to be a proficient player. The people looking you over want to know one thing, really: Will you be a congenial, interesting member who adds personality, enthusiasm and perhaps humor to the club? You do not have to be a good player. You do have to know the rules of golf, and you do have to be cordial and caring toward the caddies and employees you meet. This is key. Do not ignore the people helping you. It will be noticed. Remember everyone's names and refer to people by name, showing that you are paying attention. Compliment good shots; say nothing about the mishits.

During your round, tell stories about adventures you've had, in golf and in business too, and try to make the stories self-deprecating. Be amusing in gentle ways. Pretend you're a good guy, bedeviled by golf and by life.

Remember, almost everyone you'll ever play golf with is terrible too. People play for the companionship, the exercise and the mutual therapy. Also remember this old line: "Golf is the only thing you'll ever do in life where you get what you deserve."

And when you get into the club, you too will eventually judge others. Be kind to them.

I'm working on digital initiatives at a local college. But secretly, I've always wanted to be a writer. My job here is secure, I think, but would staying mean I'd have to give up my dream of being a writer? How badly do you want this dream? I majored in English in college and also wanted to be writer. After school, I took the coward's way out and went into a family financial business, feeling like a failure. "I want to be a writer," I told my father.

He was from a long line of tough dads. "You're coming into this business," he said. "And if you want to write badly enough, you'll write no matter what you're doing." I took this as a challenge, determined to show him... and prove it to myself.

This isn't about me; it's about you. But the point of my story is, don't talk about your dream. Make the time and do it. My 11th book is just out. And I'm still running a wealth-management business full time.

OK, so it is ultimately about me. But it can be about you. It depends on your passion. If you're only halfway in love, you're not really in love. It's no excuse to say, "I'm too busy to work on my book."

Talk is cheap. Walk the walk.

I'm in my early 20s and completely clueless when it comes to finance. My parents have done my taxes for years. My dad recently gave me sole access to a brokerage account he has been using to save money to pay off my college loans, and it's a terrifying mystery to me. I've tried reading up on this stuff to better inform myself, but I always get lost in the technical jargon. I'd really like to know what's going on with my money when I start to pay off college loans soon. Any suggestions for a financial dummy? You're not alone. You'd be amazed how little most people really understand about managing money. But let's start with a few simple truths. I've been watching over people's money for decades, and I try to boil down what seems complicated to common sense.

Number one: Movements in stock markets are 80 percent emotional and 20 percent reality. Fear and greed dominate the process. When fear dominates, that's when others panic and you often find bargains to buy. When greed rules the market and everyone seems to be making money and congratulating themselves, it's probably the time to be doing some selling.

You're not alone. You'd be amazed how little most people really understand about managing money.

Number two: Concentrate on companies whose products and services you enjoy and use. This is a concept from one of the best investors in history, Peter Lynch. "Buy what you know" is the eyes-and-ears approach to your portfolio.

You'll really learn if you get your feet wet with picks of your own. You'll learn a lot from your mistakes.

I went to a seafood restaurant recently and got violently ill shortly thereafter. I just knew it was that shellfish. I ended up going to a hospital emergency ward, thinking I was dying. It was a horrible experience. I felt that they were not going to get away with it. I went to the restaurant and demanded of the manager that I get my dinner money back, plus my hospital costs, gas to the doctor and parking charges. I was told, "Prove it was us." I called the Board of Health and want to write a letter to our local paper. I want revenge. Am I crazy? Well, borderline crazy. But I'm always outraged by the bad behavior of society in general these days. And I do believe in standing up for your rights. That being said, I would put nothing into writing to the owner of the restaurant or to a newspaper. It can leave you open to retaliation from an owner who may have deeper pockets than you. You do not want to escalate a "tweetle beetle battle," as Dr. Seuss termed adventures like this. Pick your battles. This should not be one of them. ◆

Soroff On / Jessie Mueller

PIE IN THE SKY

THE ACTRESS AND SINGER TALKS WAITING TABLES, RESUME FIBS AND DISNEY PRINCES.

TONY AWARD WINNER JESSIE MUELLER WILL STAR in the American Repertory Theater's production of Waitress, a musical based on the 2007 film and scored by Sara Bareilles that premieres at the Loeb Drama Center Aug. 2-Sept. 27. Born and raised in Evanston, Illinois, Mueller graduated from Syracuse University and quickly became a force in the Chicago theater scene. She made her Broadway debut opposite Harry Connick Jr. in a revival of On a Clear Day You Can See Forever and was nominated for a Drama Desk Award for her role in The Mystery of Edwin Drood. In 2014, she won the Tony Award for best actress in a musical for her role as Carole King in Beautiful. She lives in New York.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Most actors spend their lives waiting tables instead of acting. You're kind of doing things backward.
JESSIE MUELLER: Yes, I am. I won a Tony, and now I have a waitressing gig. But it's probably more realistic than people would like to admit.

Both your parents and your siblings are actors. Is it in the blood? Yes, somehow. I think it's in the temperament. It might be nature versus nurture, but it's in there somewhere.

When you won your Tony, did you sleep with it? No. It's very heavy and not very cozy. It has lots of sharp edges. But I did take a picture of it propped up on my pillow.

Were you a big Carole King fan before doing Beautiful? No, I wasn't really. I liked her music without even really knowing that it was hers, but I was more into James Taylor when I was growing up.

Favorite Carole King song? The first thing that comes to mind is "It's Gonna Take Some Time This Time." I love that whole album, Music.

Song you wish you wrote? So many. I should start keeping a list. I so envy people who can write songs. There's a Sara Bareilles song I wish I wrote. She writes so personally and specifically, but it ends up being so universal that I've had moments when I've thought, "Oh my God! She wrote that about me!" Taking personal experiences or hardships and making them into something beautiful is such a gift. It's not something everyone can do. Some people are just blessed.

Fantasy duet partner? Oooooh, child! That's another long list, but I'll go with Norbert Leo Butz. I met him recently, and I would love to perform with him.

Do you think you're stronger as an actor or a singer? I knew that was coming. I'd like to think that one informs the other. Any time I sing, there's always a part of my actor brain at work.

Is Harry Connick Jr. as dreamy as he seems? Total dreamboat. But he's really funny, too. It's a great mix.

Fantasy love-scene partner? Pick a Disney prince. Any Disney prince. Because I want to be a Disney princess.

So when is Hollywood going to come knocking? I have no idea, but if they did, I'd certainly open the door.

"If I have to sing at a concert or come on and do one song at a benefit, that stuff freaks me out. I'm a hot mess."

Role you wanted but didn't get? Fanny Brice in Funny Girl.

Biggest lie on your acting resume? I've lied more on non-acting resumes. Like when I've applied for a waitressing job, I lied and said I had experience, or when I applied for a temp agency, I got real creative with the way I described things. If I'd shuffled some papers, I'd say, "I was an administrative assistant."

Favorite Shakespeare play? I'm not superbly well-versed in the Bard, but I'll go with As You Like It. It has some beautiful language and a wonderful sense of whimsy to it. It's a love story, but it's also funny and dramatic. It has a little bit of everything.

Person you're dying to work with? There are musicians I've always admired. I always wanted to be a backup singer for James Taylor.

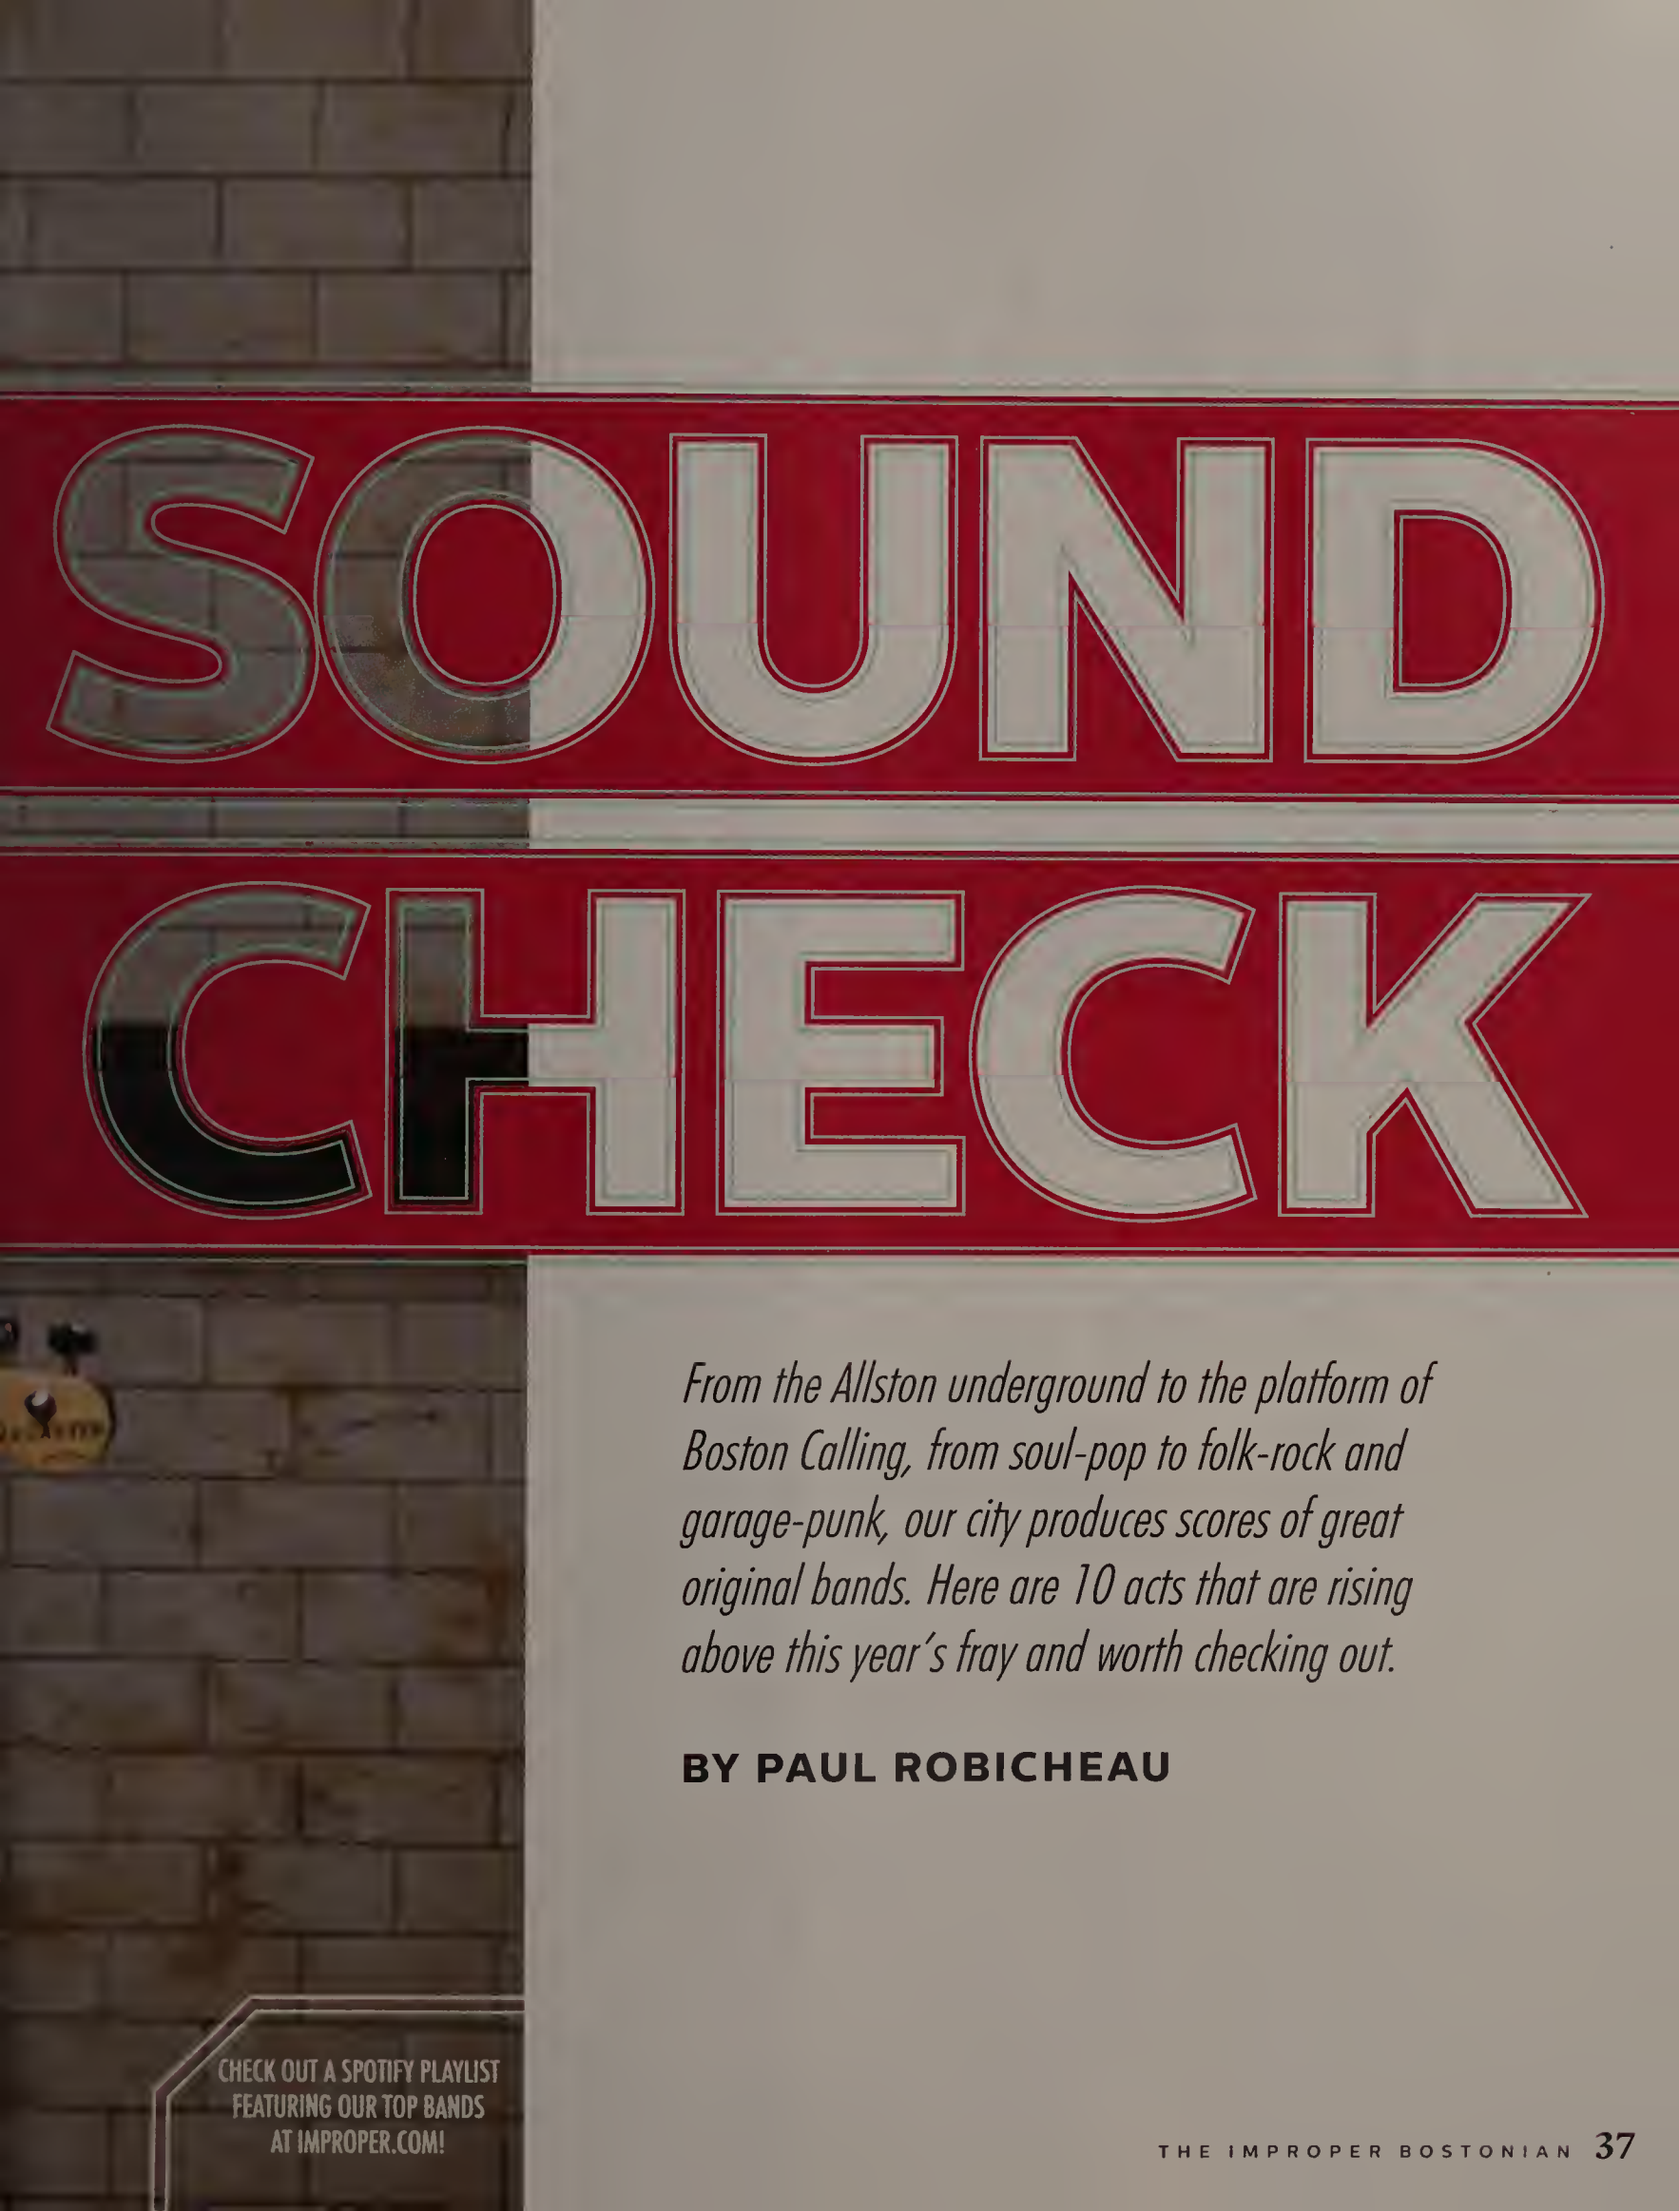
Anyone you'd never work with again? Yes, and I will never say who it is.

Biggest onstage faux pas? Well, when I did The Mystery of Edwin Drood with the Roundabout, there's a scene where everyone was supposed to sing out their internal monologue, and I opened my mouth and some jibberish just came out. I just couldn't stop laughing.

Do you get stage fright? Not clinical stage fright. I can get very, very nervous before I go on stage, and it's usually for things that aren't in a show. Like if I have to sing at a concert or come on and do one song at a benefit, that stuff freaks me out. I'm a hot mess.

Biggest splurge or self-indulgence now that you're successful? Probably my biggest self-indulgence is to believe that I'm a successful actor. I could be out of a job tomorrow. But a material thing? I'm guessing a massage.

You've never had that feeling of "I've arrived"? I've had a glimpse of that, but it never lasts. But it is nice to have a feeling that I belong here, that I have a seat at the table, or that I might be invited back. That's a really great feeling.



Are you uncomfortable watching yourself? Yes, which is why it would be difficult if I did TV or film. Even if I see a cute picture, I get freaked out.

Red carpet secret? I wish I had one. That always feels so awkward to me. I'm like, "What do I do with my hands?" "Do I hold my clutch or give it to someone?" They don't train you for this stuff. Do I put my shoulders forward or back, and look like an emaciated model? Which looks better? I have no idea. But I think the best thing to do is to get to a point of happiness about being there and hope that comes through.

Celebrity who had you absolutely starstruck? I loved meeting Eugene Levy, because I'm such a huge fan. I didn't even know what to say to him. Brian May was another one, the guitarist from Queen. That was big. I think if I ever met Julie Andrews, I'd freak out, because she's just like a queen.

Three words to describe Diane Paulus? Focused. Calm. And silly. ◆

RUBY ROSE FOX

Ruby Rose Fox took a long time to find her voiee. "When you've been soeially eonditioned to be a Disney princess, it's hard to sing like Elvis," says Fox, whose low, luxuriant voice didn't fit the script during classical studies at New England Conservatory she undertook while still a student at Brookline High in the early 2000s.

"When I was studying opera, they told me I was a eontralto. So I immediately looked up all the parts I was going to be playing, and they were all whores and old women," says Fox, who also grew dissatisfied when she took aeting classes at Emerson, delivering words written by others. "I was foreed to make my own path."

Four years ago, she began writing dramatic pop vignettes, refleeting the emotive mood and tone of the Roy Orbison songs she loved as a ehild. And it's paid off in the past year with a Boston Music Award for female voealist of the year (plus a Boston's Best award from The Improper), a line of singles launched with the immaculate "Die Pretty" and the ehance to open shows for kindred spirit Martha Davis' band, the Motels.

"I've had a real intense urgency regarding this musie," says Fox, who sang in the reggae/ska band Mass Hysteria in her teens as Rachel Eliot before legally adopting her late grandmother's name. "I think that's why I've grown so fast."

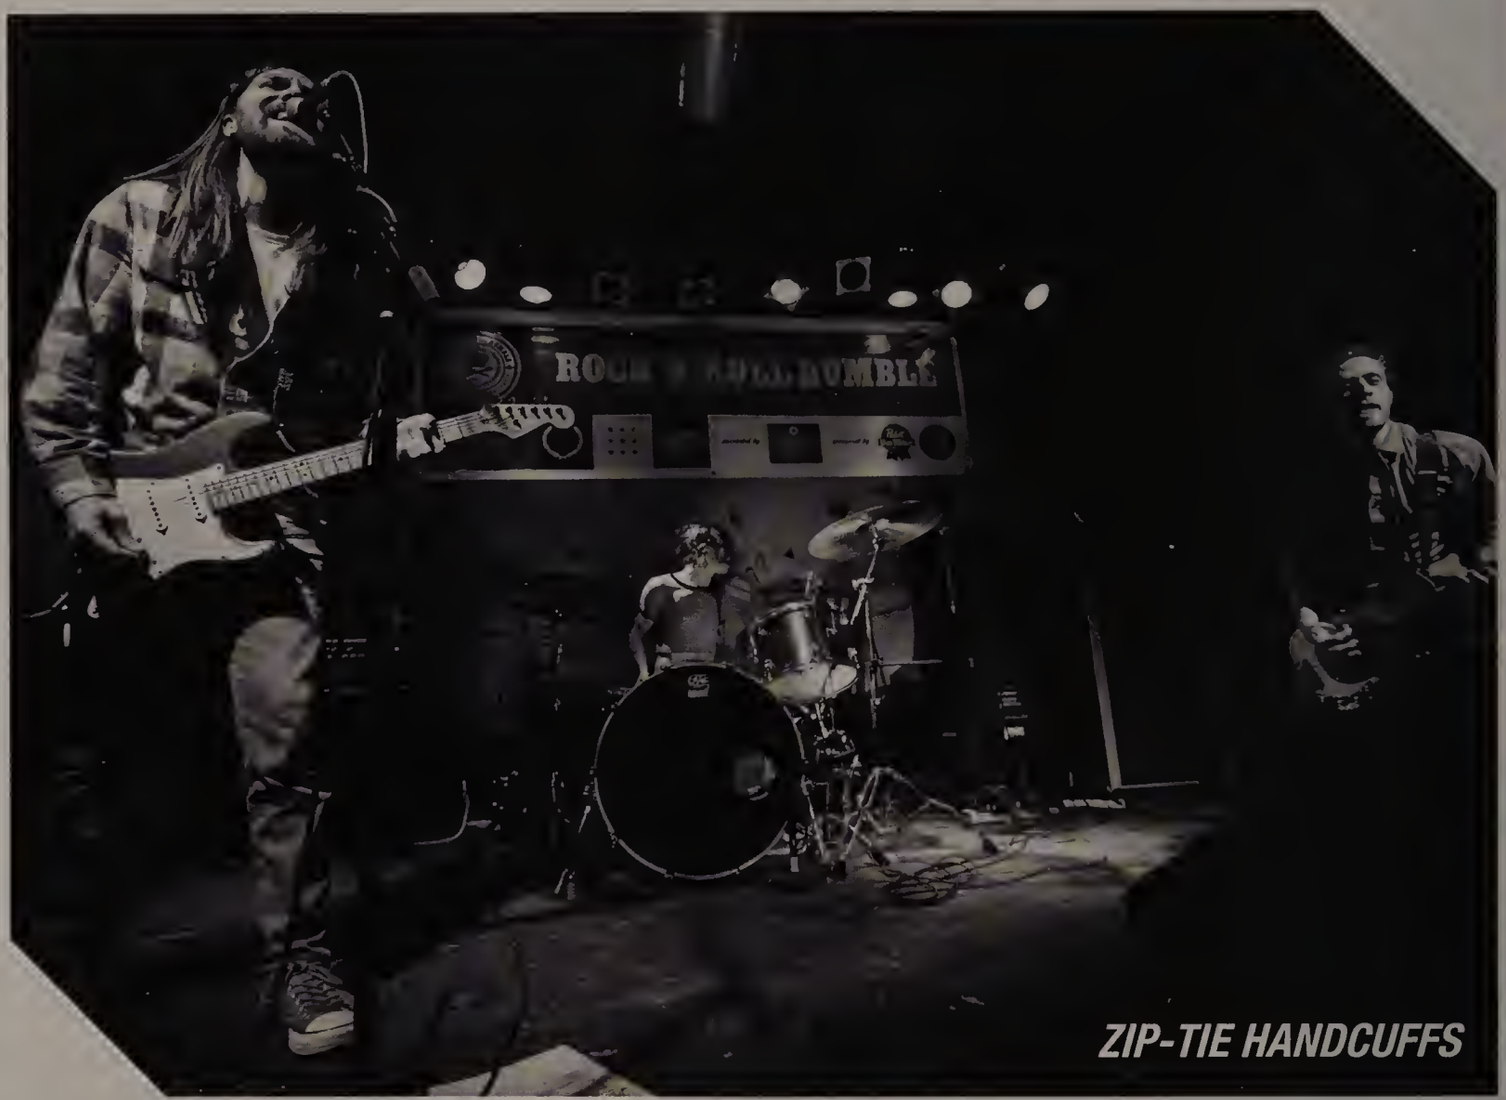
"Blue Angel" and "Good Friday," two more singles in advanee of an album to be funded through PledgeMusic, hint at gospel beyond their biblical allusions. "When I was younger, I sort of broke up with God," says Fox, who grew up in a fundamentalist Baptist family. "I'm still a little bitter at some of the dark aspeets of Christianity."

That gospel sound is amplified in her band, whieh boasts three female baekup singers. "When I make demos, a lot of it is ehoral because I have to sing what I'm hearing," she says. "I end up with demos that have four- or five-part harmonies and get attaehed to them. I'm also a huge Leonard Cohen fan, and he uses a lot of ehoral singers."

Fox ealls her backing trio the Steinems, after feminist pioneer Gloria Steinem. "It really helps to have strong women around me," the singer/guitarist says. "They help me emotionally and spiritually."

THE BALLROOM THIEVES

Folk-rockers the Ballroom Thieves got their start in a Stonehill College dorm room, where Devin Mauch put a djembe on its side and began pounding it with a stick while Martin Earley played acoustic guitar. "Dorm rooms are too small to have a full drum set, so we wanted to get the big sound of a drum set without actually having all the parts," singer/songwriter Earley says. "It's just kind of evolved."



Evolved is an understatement—and that extends beyond Mauch's setup, which now includes a snare, a floor tom, cymbals and some bells around his legs. The Ballroom Thieves released their fabulous debut album, A Wolf in the Doorway, in April and earned an opening slot at Boston Calling in May. Now the four-year-old trio is slated to perform at the Newport Folk Festival on July 26. "It's one of our favorite places in the world," metaphor-rooted songwriter Earley says of that landmark folk fest. "It was more of a 'Holy shit' moment rather than 'This is expected.' "

The Ballroom Thieves did expect to gain a solid replacement on cello when the classically trained Calin Peters joined two years ago. "It's just a really versatile instrument, so it allows us to keep our band kinda small," says Earley, who plays some hollow-bodied electric guitar. But Peters has broadened the trio's sound in unanticipated ways, adding electric bass to sinewy blues-rocker "Wolf" and not only joining in harmonies but serving as an enchanting lead vocal on "Bury Me Smiling."

"We've done some things where all three of us play drums onstage or people switch roles," Earley says of a sound that's passionate and anthemic enough to appeal to fans of both the Lone Bellow and Dispatch. "It's about having a good time while we play these songs."

ZIP-TIE HANDCUFFS

Hard rock often works best when it teeters on the edge of falling apart, something Zip-Tie Handcuffs had down to a science on their way to winning the 2015 Rock 'n' Roll Rumble. Guitarist/singer Matt Ford sums it up by relaying a conversation with soundman Alec Rodriguez, who co-produced the trio's fourth album, Sundream.

"He was telling me that mixing us is like driving a Camaro at top speed," Ford says. "I like that feeling, on the verge of going too fast but keeping it on the rails."

Ford, bassist/singer Ian Grinold and drummer/singer Max Levy have logged plenty of time on their high-performance engine. New Hampshire native Ford and the Connecticut-bred Grinold met at the New England Institute of Art in Brookline, forming the band in 2007. The Vermont-raised Levy joined a year later. And their ragged, joyous combustion can remind one of Nirvana when that band rode the rails.

"We're definitely influenced by a lot of three-piece bands," says Ford, citing the Jimi Hendrix Experience along with Green Day and Nirvana. One quality that sets Zip-Tie Handcuffs apart, however, is the trio's shifting, punctuating vocals. "We mix a lot of heavy music with pop music. We love the attitude and aggression of punk rock, but we also love the poppy sensibilities of the Beatles and the Beach Boys. Our vocals [attract] people who are not usually into punk."

Zip-Tie Handcuffs are writing a fifth album to record this fall and also planning a live release, a once-vital but now-rare rock artifact. "I personally love live albums, like the MC5's debut," Ford says. "You can hear the energy leaving the speakers."

DIRTY BANGS

Evan Kenney didn't intend to start a new band. He'd already hit creative pay dirt with both post-punk outfit Read Yellow and party group Bodega Girls before his last project, Thunderbloods, proved short-lived. But the singer began working on songs at Thunderbloods guitarist Steven Lord's Salem studio, and it all clicked.

"When you record something with two people, you think, 'Maybe we just like it,' " Kenney says, but other people seemed equally enthused. "We were getting gig offers, and we didn't have a band."

That changed just as quickly. Kenney pulled in Read Yellow and Thunderbloods guitar foil Jesse Vuona while Lord drafted guitarist/bassist Ben Voskeritchian and drummer Rob Motes from his other group, These Wild Plains. Dirty Bangs were born, and they were off to Texas to play SXSW as well as shows arranged through San Antonio Spurs forward Matt Bonner and his brother, who'd caught Bodega Girls in a Northampton bar and became well-connected friends.

"It was like a camping trip with a bunch of guys," Kenney says of Dirty Bangs' maiden voyage in Texas. "Our personalities melded well together."

That's evident in songs like "I'm in Love with the Summertime" and the arch "We're All Gunna Die Sometime," which slay as dreamily distorted glides. "We found such an affection for simple soul and rock 'n' roll," Kenney says. "Kind of like what the Jesus and Mary Chain did, which was taking Ronettes songs and putting really loud music over it. That's a formula I always loved."

Dirty Bangs truly connect live, when the guitarists dabble on effects pedals for orchestral interludes and Kenney hops offstage to engage people face-to-face as he sings. "That whole aspect is from my old punk-rock days," says Kenney, whose band plays Boston Calling in September. "We started focusing more on the old soul tactic where the band watches where the singer goes, just kicks ass, and brings it back when it's time."

OH, MALÔ

Some people talk about music in terms of colors. Art-rock modernists Oh, Malô have brought that idea to fruition, releasing three haunting, color-coded EPs dubbed Blue, Red and Orange. It started not as a conceptual experiment, but simply a way to catalog songs that Brandon Hafetz wrote after a funk from a breakup.

"Songs would just come out of nowhere, and I wasn't writing in a consistent genre or style," singer/guitarist Hafetz says. "These heavy [red] ones are really kind of angry, these blue ones are just moody, sad and ambient, and then the orange ones are the passive, melancholic, kind of calm-after-the-storm songs. But emotionally, I was really experiencing all three of those at the same time."

The music production major at Berklee found sympathetic classmates in lead guitarist Jack McLoughlin, bassist Jordan Lagana and drummer James Knoerl, serving ethereal rock that's rich in dynamics, with delicate vocals and surging builds that evoke Radiohead, Local Natives and, especially, the late Jeff Buckley.

"He's a great example of dynamics," says Hafetz, who first heard Buckley when people made the comparison during a high school trip through the French city that gave Oh, Malô its name. "That stuff takes a left turn and goes somewhere you wouldn't imagine, then goes further, to the point it's almost too much."

The band plans to supplement the six songs of Blue, Red and Orange with six more tracks that should fit the same color spread for a fall album release. "We're still not sure what people like best of what we're doing," Hafetz says. "Once you have fans, on some level, you want to satisfy them, at least as a young band."

NEMES

If any listeners have trouble categorizing the music of Nemes, they're not alone. "It's hard to pin down exactly what we are," says guitarist/singer Dave Anthony, who formed the Worcester-bred band with his brother Chris on drums and fiddler/singer Josh Knowles, whom the guitarist first saw perform in their high school jazz band.

"I leaned into my dad sitting next to me and said, 'That kid and I are going to make awesome music together,' " Anthony recalls. Five years ago, Nemes was named one of the five best unsigned bands in the country by Alternative Press magazine, and the group just drew new fans by cracking the finals of the Rock 'n' Roll Rumble.

"The fiddle kind of changes it," Anthony says. "Josh is such a unique, individual player. He's able to make that fiddle sound like a ukulele when he wants to."

However, Knowles' often manic fiddling—particularly live—effectively works in counterpoint to the quartet's smartly arranged blend of Americana, hard rock and lilting pop. Rounded out by bassist Alex Glover, Nemes shines on its diverse 2014 album I Carry Your Heart, which was named after an e.e. cummings poem and sometimes sounds like Mumford & Sons with ADHD.

"We're kind of all over the place," Anthony says. "Me and Josh love jazz, Alex loves jam music, Chris loves pop-punk, and it's really weird the way we meld."

I Carry Your Heart even sports one song, "Tengo Nada," that Anthony sings in broken Spanish. "I learned Spanish from very poor farmers who were illiterate and came to this country illegally to landscape," he says. "I worked with them for years, and they kinda taught me how to speak enough to seduce a girl."

LATRELL JAMES

"With Twelve, I wanted to show that believing in yourself can take you further than what you'd think," says rapper/producer Latrell James, whose new numerically titled album continually reflects his pride and drive in pursuing his hip-hop dreams in lieu of completing a college degree in business administration.

"I had good friends change up and ex-girls hang up," James raps on "Distance," defending his choice of priorities. "Don't you ever interfere with my zone."

The 12 tracks of Twelve reflect 12 years in his life, from waking to a world where people "skip lines of employment and jump in line for Jordans" in "Beautiful Day" to the thankful, defiant closer "Candles," which he relates to his Dec. 12 birthday.

"It was kind of my rebirth situation," James says of the album. "I feel like I'm so brutally honest and not afraid to expose myself, so people are going to connect."

It helps that his lyrics are direct, his music atmospheric, with beats muted to the message. "I wanted to make sure the lyrics were the focal point," he says, "but also that the production was complex with layers, though not too complex."

James grew up in Dorchester. "I started producing because my parents couldn't afford to buy me beats," says the rapper, who was into Michael Jackson and R&B before he embraced hip-hop. "R&B songs couldn't get a message across, but in a rap song, in 16 bars, you can get a lot of information," he says. "DMX was one of the first reasons why I started rapping. Something about his energy and honesty."

Now his family lives in Brockton, and James benefits from working in his basement studio, though the rapper who says "My Lamborghini was an Altima" on Twelve often comes up with lyrics on the road. "The car ride I guess opens your mind," he says. "[There's] a lot of mumbling in the car. Pretty awkward, but it works."

He's also itching to perform more, tapping live musicians to complement his studio beats and synthesizers. "There's only so much energy you can get on a record," he says. "I feel that people like to hear different interpretations of a song."

VUNDABAR

College students mill around an Allston house concert, crowding the basement space where Vundabar unleashes its indie-rock din. One kid starts to hang from a pipe but drops off after a collective shout of "No!" from his peers. "It got a little out of hand," guitarist/singer Brandon Hagen recalls of a scene that belied his trio's growing national profile behind its July 24 sophomore release, Gawk.

Stranger things have happened. Vundabar pressed 200 CDs of its 2013 debut, Antics, and handled its own press, landing a write-up in a French blog and a call from an overseas promoter. "It just sounded like a scam, 'cause he had broken English, like 'I am big French agent. I bring you to giant festival,' " Hagen says. "We were kind of skeptical at first, but he turned out to be a great guy."

So Vundabar played for thousands last summer, when the band's biggest prior show had been opening for Mac DeMarco at the Middle East Downstairs. Quite the coup for "typical frustrated teenagers wanting to get out of their town," Hagen says of himself and drummer Drew McDonald, a friend from Scituate High School who recorded Antics in his bedroom with two microphones and GarageBand.

All of which sets higher expectations for Gawk, which brims with skewed pop and surf rock heavy on dynamics and a sarcastic edge in songs like the single "Oulala," where Hagen sings, "Nothing really hurts when everything's a joke."

"It's split down the middle between good-humored and cynical," Hagen says of his attitude as a songwriter, "creating the unreliable narrator."

GREY SEASON

Matt Knelman's musical future came in through the bathroom window. "My window went out to an alleyway, and I could hear this singer," guitarist Knelman recalls of listening to Jon Mills in the distance from his Berklee dorm. He didn't know it, but he shared a class with singer/songwriter Mills, who not only had a distinctive voice but played the Irish bouzouki. And Knelman met banjo player Chris "Gooch" Bloniarz on their first day at Berklee when their building was evacuated for a small fire.

Together, the three began busking in the park across the street, in front of a local Whole Foods and finally on Newbury Street. "It's amazing actually, even from just busking in the beginning, how many people we run into who come to our shows and we meet down the line who heard us play on Newbury Street three or four years ago," Knelman says. "It was a true training ground for us, and we still do it."

There's far less time for busking now. In June, they trucked off to Bonnaroo, where the band appeared after winning a SonicBids contest (and earned kudos from a Billboard writer, despite sparse attendance in a tough time slot). And they're planning for another early time slot at this September's Boston Calling, a gig bound to draw thousands.

The difference since the early days came in the addition of drummer Ben Burns and bassist Ian Jones, who pumps an electric Rickenbacker opposite the acoustic strings, while all five members connect in balanced harmonies. As a group influenced by the Band and Bob Dylan as well as the Beatles, Grey Season reveled in recording its 2014 album Time Will Tell You Well at the Woodstock barn studio of the Band's late drummer/singer Levon Helm.

"Our love for old-timey music really comes out in what we play," Knelman says. "We have a unique modern approach, but at the same time, it's steeped in the old-time roots and folk music that we've listened to equally growing up."

THE BARBAZONS

A Barbazons show can induce the sensation of an art-school/punk party, casting shades of '60s garage rock, the Cramps and the Velvet Underground as members of the Boston band groove away on guitars and stand-up drums.

"The confidence, if that's a word for it, is just from growing up with these punk sensibilities and seeing so many heroes, like Lydia Lunch and the no-wave scene in late '70s New York, just picking up whatever they could get their hands on," says Melanie Bernier, who splits lead vocals with guitarist Ryan Major and adds a bit of saxophone in addition to pounding tom-toms with drummer Peaches Goodrich.

Second guitarist Matt Garlick bolsters a hint of psychedelia, while Jake Gilbertson joined a year ago to hold the distinction of following nearly 20 previous bassists during the past five years.

For most of that time, before a name change in March, the band called itself the Fagettes. "It came from a place of wanting equality and wanting to abolish the word faggot as hateful and reclaiming it as a bisexual woman," Bernier says. "But over time, it ended up holding us back."

Rechristened the Barbazons—a name that doesn't draw the same concerns from venues and other musicians—the band launched a busy schedule behind Avec Plaisir, their lo-fi first album under the new moniker. "A barbarian and an Amazon are both figures of strength," she says, "and that's nice to think about before you get in front of a group of people and make a total ass of yourself."

That's also something that's been toned down just a tad. "In the beginning, I was into wearing outrageous outfits like giant wigs, sequined loin cloths and fringe," Bernier says. "Over time, I've become more comfortable performing, and we've grown to rely less on onstage personas. We've become ourselves."

LAST CALL AT T.T.'S

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

"I met so many amazing people working at T.T.'s that will stay with me forever," says owner Bonney Bouley. "I wish it could go on forever."

It's been 31 years since Bouley began booking rock shows at T.T. the Bear's Place at the suggestion of the failed restaurant's co-founding partner Miles Cares' daughter, who was dating the drummer for the Outlets. Countless bands have graced the stage of the Central Square club since that opening night with the Outlets, from other local rockers to rising national acts, including Jane's Addiction, Franz Ferdinand, the Black Keys, Indigo Girls, the Strokes, Letters to Cleo, the Hold Steady, the National and the Decemberists.

But now, with Bouley declining new lease terms with the owners of the Middle East, who bought the building housing both clubs, T.T.'s will close July 25 after a weeklong farewell blowout. Among the artists set to perform are the Neighborhoods, Evan Dando, Orbit, Willy Mason, the Thalia Zedek Band, Ad Frank & the Fast Easy Women, the Dogmatics, Mary Lou Lord, Bleu, Emergency Music, Parlour Bells, the Lights Out and—on the final night—O Positive and Scruffy the Cat.

The Improper asked several people associated with the club and the local rock scene for some thoughts on T.T.'s closing—and their favorite nights at the cozy music institution named after a teddy-bear hamster called Tough Teddy.

CHRIS COLBOURN, bassist/singer for Buffalo Tom and music booking agent with Concerted Efforts

"Like the eccentric uncle who has a bit too much to drink at family weddings, T.T.'s is all wrong—on paper. It has an awkward stage location and some unfortunate clanking sounds leaking from the Middle East's downstairs room during the quiet parts.... [But] I liked the nook between the PA and stage on the far side of the room, where you could get a small sliver view of a band playing close up and sweating, amps crackling, drinks spilling on sneakers. Security never tapped you on the shoulder and told you to move on."

RANDI MILLMAN, booking agent for T.T. the Bear's Place from 1996 to 2011, now booking music at Atwood's Tavern

"There have been a few magical moments, when it seems like everyone is riding the same wave of excitement and the knowledge that they are witnessing something very special.... Arcade Fire had a lot of members, so they were as squeezed onto the stage as the audience was [on the floor]. It seemed like everyone already knew every word to every song. It was completely apparent that band was going to blow up."

DAVID BIEBER, pop culture archivist and curator of the Verb Hotel
Moments will live in my skull long after the paw sign comes down and the pre-fab condos sprout up ... This lasting memory followed a scorching set from Roky Erickson, accompanied by Okkervil River. The poignancy of watching their post-show regimen, the weary monotony of the hands-on load-out, from the stage to the U-Haul parked on Brookline Street. After all the years of Texas psychobilly and nuggets of madness and drama, here was the evening-ending reward Roky and River were still their own road crew."

ANNGELLE WOOD, host of WZLX-FM's Boston Emissions and organizer of the Rock 'n' Roll Rumble
"The 2013 Rock 'n' Roll Rumble was special, given the events of the marathon. Glenn Yoder and the Western States led their semifinals set with 'Row' in honor of what had turned the city upside down just days earlier, and at that moment all hell was breaking loose just a few blocks away at MIT. The night went on, our phones began to go crazy, helicopters clamored overhead. We were to stay inside the club, glued to the TV news coverage. Surreal for sure, but we felt strangely safe among friends at T.T.'s that night."

MARK KATES, founder and CEO of Fenway Recordings and manager of Mission of Burma
"There has always been a friendly face there, usually seen upon arrival, and that is all too rare in the world of rock clubs. For those of us who spend far too much time in music venues, a smile can go a long way. It is sad to see it go, and yet 31 years is an unbelievable run for a rock club. There aren't many on earth that have lasted that long. T.T.'s is a reminder of the era of Boston rock that inspired me to make a career in the music business back in the early '80s, and we are in serious need of that kind of energy."

THALIA ZEDEK, singer/guitarist for Thalia Zedek Band and Come
"PJ Harvey played there right after Dry came out, and it might have even been her first show in the U.S. She was very shy and austere back then, and I remember being struck by how small she looked, all dressed in a black leotard with her huge hollow-body electric guitar. ... Part of what made TT's such an incredible place was that it was run and managed all by women. There were men that worked there, but it was run by women, primarily Bonney and Jeanne [Connolly]. The other part was their genuine love for the Boston music scene."

AGENDA for 7/22–8/4

Office Culture

A night of showbiz, heavy on the biz.

THERE ARE CERTAIN theater snobs who deem Broadway shows too corporate. Those folks should probably not attend Everything's Coming Up Profits, a celebration of the little-known "art form" of industrial musicals. From the 1950s through the '80s, major corporations commissioned over-the-top musicals that were performed at events like sales conventions—to hilarious effect. Some, such as The Bathrooms Are Coming, a 1969 spectacle made for bathroom and kitchen fixture company American-Standard, were preserved on film. Catch that and more when former Letterman writer and genre connoisseur Steve Young presents his favorite (read: most fantastically bizarre) clips at the Brattle Theatre on July 23. Alexandra Cavallo

Everything's Coming Up Profits plays at 8 p.m. on July 23 at the Brattle Theatre, 40 Brattle St., Cambridge. $11. brattlefilm.org

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

BOY, OH BOYS Your summer is about to get a little hotter. Fans of Magic Mike should run, not walk, to the Wilbur to take in Thunder From Down Under, a live male revue featuring all the stripped-down, beefed-up hunks your blood pressure can handle. The troupe of chiseled Aussie performers take a break from their Las Vegas residency (the most popular male revue on the Strip) to bring their talents on the road for an international tour that stops in Boston for two back-to-back shows set to pop music, at which each dancer "embodies a different female fantasy" in costumes that run the gamut from sexy fireman to sexy milkman. Outright ogling is encouraged, if not required, on July 31 when the Thunder rocks the Wilbur Theatre. / Alexandra Cavallo

HE'S A MANEATER Late '90s horror comedy Ravenous brings new meaning to the phrase "You are what you eat." A bit like the survival tale Alive (minus the guilty conscience and the athletes), this cult flick stars Guy Pearce as a military captain stranded with a group of soldiers at an isolated fort, where they investigate the arrival of a lone survivor of a wagon trip out West, a man who may be a cannibalistic half-beast. It's not long before they realize they may have bitten off more than they can chew. Try skipping a meal before feasting on this film at the Coolidge Corner Theatre, hosting midnight screenings on July 31 and Aug. 1. / Andrew Bourque

Reviews by Brett Michel

Amy ★★★1/2 I didn't know much about the late Amy Winehouse's music before watching this heartbreaking documentary from Asif Kapadia, but I was mourning her by the end. Kapadia's last picture was the 2010 doc Senna, about another talent who died too soon, Brazilian F1 driver Ayrton Senna. But it seems that was just the qualifying lap for this devastating portrait of the soulful singer who died from alcohol poisoning nearly four years ago at the age of 27. Given how much of a punch line Winehouse had become because of her public drunkenness (an infamous outdoor music festival in Serbia where she was too intoxicated to sing is shown here to powerful effect), I was one of many who wasn't surprised by her death, but Kapadia has vindicated her tremendously, compiling warts-and-all footage—much of it shot on camcorders and cellphones by some of her closest friends and enablers—that begins when she was a 14-year-old Jewish girl in North London. The first footage we see was shot at a birthday party, where we hear her gorgeous voice. "Life is short," Amy says on camera at one point. Indeed, tragically. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Ant-Man ★★★ With nearly every superhero movie climaxing with gigantic things crashing into other things, it's a tiny thrill to see the climactic sequence of Marvel's latest take place within a little girl's bedroom. Then again, when you're a hero who shrinks to the size of an ant, even a Thomas the Tank Engine toy seems imposing when barreling toward you. But cut to a wider view of the action, as director Peyton Reed does, and the small scale begets big laughs, another welcome wrinkle in the spandex-suit genre. It's doubtful Ant-Man will be as lucrative as Marvel's last big gamble, Guardians of the Galaxy, but it offers a fair amount of modest pleasures, beginning with the cast. Paul Rudd stars as Scott Lang, a small-time thief with a Robin Hood ethos. Recruited by septuagenarian scientist Hank Pym (Michael Douglas, remarkably de-aged during a 1989-set prologue), who supplies him with his suit and tech, Lang is Marvel's first blue-collar hero. He's also granted a refreshingly unexpected sidekick: Michael Peña's ex-con Luis, who almost steals the movie with his hilarious digressions. "Ant-Man will return," promises a tag after a second end-credit scene. Here's hoping they don't make it any bigger. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Dope ★★★ Unlike the dreadful Me and Earl and the Dying Girl, here's a buzzed-about award winner from this year's Sundance Film Festival that deserves its hype. A comic drama from Rick Famuyiwa (director of 2010's Our Family Wedding, which starred this film's producer and narrator, Oscar winner Forest Whitaker), it's a modern spin on Risky Business for the post-hip-hop generation. High school senior Malcolm (newcomer Shameik Moore) is a geek who loves the music and style of what he calls the "golden age of hip-hop," and he dresses the part, colorfully, right up to his high-top fade. He spends his days with best pals Jib (The Grand Budapest Hotel's Tony Revolori) and Diggy (Kiersey Clemons of Amazon's Transparent) as the three tool around the Bottoms, a tough neighborhood in their hometown of Inglewood, California, trying not to get their bikes stolen by gang members. But Malcolm finds trouble all on his own—and possibly love. Funny and charming, Dope is, well, pretty dope. (At Boston Common.)

Far from the Madding Crowd ★★ Director Thomas Vinterberg has mounted a handsome adaptation of Thomas Hardy's mid-19th-century-set literary classic that's completely superfluous in the face of John Schlesinger's nearly three-hour 1967 version that's superior in every way. Although the Dane has filled his update with strong actors—Carey Mulligan as the self-willed Bathsheba Everdene and Matthias Schoenaerts, Michael Sheen and Tom Sturridge as her three wildly different suitors—they come across as children compared to the earlier cast, which featured British legends Julie Christie, Alan Bates, Peter Finch and Terence Stamp projecting far more palpable longing in the same roles, working from a script by Frederic Raphael that took its time establishing an air of violence that threatened to overtake the sweeping romance at any moment. Vinterberg's picture runs a hair under two hours with a script courtesy of David Nicholls (screenwriter of 2011's romantic drama One Day and author of the novel it's based on). The heat-lacking results play like CliffsNotes as composer Craig Armstrong's score lays the piano and violin strings on thick, overcompensating for the sexual chemistry that was presumably left on the cutting room floor, far from the screen. (At West Newton.)

I'll See You in My Dreams ★★★ Blythe Danner shines in this comic drama directed by Brett Haley. She plays Carol, a retired schoolteacher and former singer in her 70s who's been widowed for 20 years. Her tranquil routine of playing cards with close friends (nice turns by Rhea Perlman, Mary Kay Place and June Squibb), tending to her garden and (especially) relaxing with a glass of wine is disrupted when her beloved dog dies. All alone in her spacious LA home, she finds loneliness creeping into that routine, until two new men enter her life: Lloyd (Martin Starr), the 30-something pool man who begins sharing that wine with her, and Bill, the gravelly-voiced old cowboy (played by Sam Elliott, naturally) who begins wooing Carol, who hasn't dated since her husband's death. The script, courtesy of Haley and Marc Basch, avoids veering into cliche, and Danner exhibits an easy rapport with the ensemble that belies the compressed shooting schedule on this charming independent production. Some tears are shed, but Danner's transcendent turn behind the mic at a karaoke bar keeps the

Infinitely Polar Bear ★★★ Drawing from her experience growing up in Cambridge as the older of two biracial sisters—children of a bipolar Boston Brahmin and his long-suffering African-American wife—writer/director Maya Forbes casts her daughter (novice Imogene Wolodarsky, a natural actress) as 11-year-old Amelia Stuart, her surrogate in this quasi-autobiographical drama. Amelia's wrestling with a world that tells her race matters; so is her mother, Maggie (Zoe Saldana, charming despite limited screen time), who faces difficulty as a black woman trying to find corporate work in Boston during the late '70s. The film centers on Maggie's husband, Cam (Mark Ruffalo delivering great work in a tricky role); the episodic structure Forbes weaves through a handful of seasons serves as an affectionate tribute to the ups and downs of her deceased dad. Amelia and younger sister Faith (Ashley Aufderheide, another natural) do much of the parenting as Cam struggles to fill his role as father while Maggie studies for her MBA in Manhattan—but he emerges as a positive influence. Forbes understands that children are resilient; as she reminds us with her heartfelt family remembrance, it's possible to emerge from painful experiences not only stronger, but also smiling. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Inside Out ★★★1/2 Riley Anderson (voiced by Kaitlyn Dias), the 11-year-old girl at the center of Pixar's 15th animated marvel, has just moved from Minnesota to San Francisco, where her cramped new house is creaky, old and gray. But then, this isn't your typical sunny kids fare. This third feature film from writer/director Pete Docter (Monsters, Inc., Up) is presented from a uniquely creative perspective: inside her head, in a control room known as Headquarters. Staffed by a crew of five emotions, Riley's mind offers a colorful counterpoint to her drab new surroundings. Joy (a chipper Amy Poehler), the leader of the group, is a yellow-hued pixie. Joy has been Riley's dominant emotion, but now that the young girl faces depressing circumstances—living somewhere unfamiliar, starting at a new school with no friends—Sadness (Phyllis Smith), teardrop-shaped and appropriately blue, is becoming more prominent. Rounding out the emotions are Anger (Lewis Black), Fear (Bill Hader) and Disgust (Mindy Kaling). Docter, one of Pixar's founding members (a cohort known within the company as the "Brain Trust"), makes his diagnosis clear: Sometimes, it takes a touch of sadness to experience and appreciate real joy. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jurassic World ★★ The original Jurassic Park was directed by Steven Spielberg. This third sequel is directed by its visual effects. Naturally, the film's a runaway success. It's also unnecessary—when it's not busy being incredibly stupid. But if you like dinosaurs? Hoo-boy, is this the film for you! Remember Jeff Goldblum's Ian Malcolm? He's not in this. No, there's a new "rock star" in town: Chris Pratt's Owen Grady. He's some kind of Raptor Whisperer. Why? Why not. He's also a one-dimensional "type," like everyone else here. The movie's in such a rush that Bryce Dallas Howard's uptight Claire Dearing doesn't have time to remove her high heels, even when running from a Tyrannosaurus Rex. Oh, the poor, old-fashioned, sponsor-free T-Rex. She might as well be extinct, compared to the new genetic hybrid dubbed "Verizon Wireless presents the Indominus Rex." Alas, not a single sequence matches the sheer white-knuckle terror of the T-Rex attack in the original. But then, Spielberg is known for his peerless action sequences, while this picture's hired hand, Colin Trevorrow, had only made one small-budget indie before being handed the keys to the theme park. His work's competent. Verizon should sponsor his next blockbuster. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Love & Mercy ★★★1/2 By all rights, Bill Pohlad's biographical film about the life of Brian Wilson shouldn't work. This unconventional portrait of the singer/songwriter and leader of the Beach Boys focuses on two eras in the troubled genius's life: the creative renaissance surrounding Pet Sounds and two decades later, when he emerged from a couple of years in bed, heavily medicated and under the 24/7 watch of dubious therapist Eugene "Gene" Landy, played by a fright-wigged Paul Giamatti. Within the film's tricky structure (terrifically edited by Dino Jonsäter), Gene stands as Brian's second abusive father figure; the physical abuse inflicted by his actual father (Bill Camp) left him mostly deaf in his right ear. And yet, Brian could still hear the music in his head. Alas, he also heard voices, which he confesses to his love, Melinda Ledbetter (Elizabeth Banks), during one of many quietly devastating scenes set in the '80s, where he's played by John Cusack, who doesn't remotely resemble the real Wilson, unlike Paul Dano, who portrays him during the '60s. Like I said, it shouldn't work. But like Wilson himself, the seemingly incompatible aspects come together—and they sing. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Mad Max: Fury Road ★★★1/2 Max Rockatansky returns, madder than ever, but more hardened. He's a changed man, played by Tom Hardy, filling the boots previously worn by Mel Gibson in filmmaker George Miller's first three Mad Max pictures. In hindsight, the climactic 14-minute chase sequence in 1982's The Road Warrior served as a test run for Mad Max: Fury Road, which the 70-year-old Miller has distilled into a single two-hour chase. This is pure cinema, and it shames the work of directors half Miller's age. When Max is captured by brutal warlord Immortan Joe (Hugh Keays-Byrne), he becomes a "blood bag" for Nux (Nicholas Hoult), a cancer-ridden "War Boy" who requires transfusions. Meanwhile, Imperator Furiosa (Charlize Theron), one of Joe's lieutenants, has secretly liberated his five wives in her War Rig. A small army of Joe's War Boys gives pursuit, and Max, chained to the front of Nux's hot rod, is along for the ride. Vehicular mayhem ensues and Max escapes, teaming up with Furiosa, his fate now bound to hers. As the armies of more warlords converge, the earlier films' battles for oil and gas are replaced by a fight for something more precious: human life. A masterpiece of motion. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Magic Mike XXL ★★1/2 Steven Soderbergh's Magic Mike surprised by being much more than expected. Sure, it was a peek into the world of male strippers, but it delved deeper, examining the struggles of a post-recession society. It was one of 2012's best films. This sequel is the movie people thought the first one would be. Gone is Matthew McConaughey's emcee, Dallas, along with any sense of a story. Also missing is the guiding hand of Soderbergh, who's retired from directing films (although he's remarkably busy—and reportedly happier—directing television). But even though he's handed the reins of this film to his longtime assistant director, Gregory Jacobs, he remains the movie's cinematographer and editor, so it's still enjoyable to watch—perhaps especially if you're a woman, the half of the species that this picture celebrates. Mind you, there's still plenty of beefcake on display, from Channing Tatum's titular character to Joe Manganiello's Big Dick Richie, who features in the film's one great scene, set inside a convenience store. But it's the ladies who are treated as "queens," as they're affectionately called by the Kings of Tampa's new emcee, Rome (Jada Pinkett Smith), one of Mike's old flames the boys pick up on this road trip to their farewell performance. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Spy ★★★ There's been a welcome trend of women taking on roles typically associated with men this summer, and now we have a movie bluntly titled Spy to subvert James Bond-style genre tropes. It not only gives us a requisite pre-credit action sequence featuring a suave, globe-trotting agent played by Jude Law, but it also offers up Jason Statham in bulldoggish Daniel Craig mode as a second CIA spook. However, the script then contrives to blow one agent's cover and the other's brains from the back of his head, opening up an undercover opportunity for the film's true star, Melissa McCarthy. That's right: This is a comedy, one that once again pairs the force of nature with writer/director Paul Feig after their successful collaborations on Bridesmaids and Heat. Unlike those pictures, though, this is a one-woman show, giving McCarthy ample room to display her talents once she leaves behind her basement-dwelling desk-analyst role, donning a variety of personas and disguises as she infiltrates the ring of a deadly arms dealer played by Rose Byrne, her Bridesmaids co-star. And surprisingly, McCarthy's Susan Cooper kicks a lot of ass—when she's not tickling funny bones. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Terminator Genisys ★ Here's another profit-minded franchise film that, like Jurassic World, is dependent on nostalgic callbacks. It's also a slap in the face to James Cameron's 1984 original, which director Alan Taylor slavishly recreates while simultaneously rewriting it. But what Taylor forgets is that the first Terminator was a doomed love story. Michael Biehn's Kyle Reese was a wounded soul from the future who gave his heart and life to save Linda Hamilton's Sarah Connor as he traveled through time to protect her from Arnold Schwarzenegger's unstoppable killing machine, literally planting the seed that would give the human race a fighting chance at survival. Here, the former governor of California comfortably reprises his iconic role; ironically, he's less robotic than Jai Courtney and Emilia Clarke, who step into the boots of Hamilton and Biehn without displaying any love for the material or each other. What results is an endless game of Groundhog Day, where the future can constantly be reset. Nothing's at stake, since everyone can simply bounce back and forth in time, rewriting history—including turning Arnold's Terminator into a cock-blocking father figure called "Pops." Would that someone could erase this film's existence as easily. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

A NEW BROOD For yet another summer, New Zealand's music scene is pumping out self-reflective lyrics that float over synth bars and drum claps—though this time they're not coming from Grammy collector Lorde. Young sibling duo Broods, however, have worked with their fellow Kiwi's producer Joel Little since their high school years, and it shows. Singer Georgia Nott toys with her ethereal voice while her brother Caleb's dreamy soundscapes show off his unique mixing and instrumental talents. From haunting memorials of lost love to pop anthems about backseat sex, the siblings' first full release, Evergreen, is honest, refreshing and, of course, brooding, and they go the whole nine yards on July 23, when they join Passion Pit at the Lawn on D. Charlie Gill PHOTO: STEPHEN TILLEY

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

IN VOGUE Get up clothes and personal with 20th-century style at Robert Klein Gallery, now hosting a trove of work from photographers who documented the era's most fashionable icons and moments. Its new exhibit Women in Clothes includes photos by Yousuf Karsh, who got his start apprenticing in Boston and went on to take portraits of style icons like Brigitte Bardot, Audrey Hepburn and Jackie O, and Horst P. Horst, whose 1949 photo of fur-clad model Suzy Parker is shown here. Also on view are fashion-forward works by William Klein, Irving Penn and Man Ray, as well as Gordon Parks, the subject of the MFA's current Back to Fort Scott exhibit. The self-taught shutterbug was Life magazine's first African-American staff photographer, but fewer know he also shot for Vogue. The lens focuses on Women in Clothes through Sept. 12. | Sarah Hagman

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Finding a plot of land to garden in is hard enough in a city, but sustaining an all-natural diet for a year seems like a recipe for trouble. So when Megan Kimble decided to spend a year eating food in only its most natural form—leaving additives shrink-wrapped on shelves in favor of natural foods she could make in her own kitchen—she had her work cut out for her. In Unprocessed: My City-Dwelling Year of Reclaiming Real Food, the 20-something food editor chronicles that journey, on which she chose CSAs over supermarkets, made sea salt from ocean water and even slaughtered an animal. Break (homemade) bread with Kimble on July 24 when she heads to Porter Square Books. / Gabriella Cerio

the IMPROPER On the Town!

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

LIGHTBULB MOMENTS

I THINK I BLEW MY OMG REFLEX DURING the making of our Innovation issue. In our lead feature, you'll get to know both a huggable robot and a man with a shot at becoming a Martian. You'll encounter a company that wants you to slather on bacteria in the shower and another that wants you to pop pills of freeze-dried poop. You'll meet mood-altering wearables and a device meant to be implanted inside the brain, where it may someday head PTSD flashbacks off at the pass. You'll find looks at apps and incubators, jetpacks and flying cars, predictions from industry pros and much more. Of course, the innovation happening in Boston, Cambridge and surrounding towns can't be captured in a single feature, but this small slice is a fascinating one. Elsewhere, Alayna Eberhart rounds up some 3-D-printed bling, Meghan Kavanaugh chats with business-savvy Shark Tank star Kevin O'Leary, and Jonathan Soroff interviews our cover subject, Denis Leary, who's launched a new venture of his own. We hope it all fuels the fire under whatever big idea you've got brewing.

FASHION FLING

A SISTER ACT OFFERS A TEMPORARY STYLE FIX.

Something Borrowed

Sisters Nikoleta and Vicky Lirantonakis got the idea for their new business venture from an unlikely source: a group text among girlfriends about a last-minute fashion emergency. "One of our friends used an online rental company and got the dress and hated it, but ended up wearing it anyway because she was stuck with it and had no other time to find something else," Nikoleta recalls. "We really wished that there was a brick-and-mortar we could visit to try the dresses on."

Seven months after that fruitful conversation, the sisters opened Best Dressed in the Charlestown Navy Yard. The only designer rental store of its kind in Boston, it offers five-day rentals for dresses ($40-$150) and accessories ($10-$40), along with a selection of accessories for sale. Each sister brings her own expertise to the shop: Vicky manages the business side in addition to working by day at Hill Holiday, while Nikoleta draws on 10 years of fashion experience for styling, buying and merchandising. She curates a lineup of modern and vintage styles that range from edgy to classic and include designers like Nanette Lepore, GiGi New York and Parker, helping clients find the right look for a big event. "That's what it's all about," she says, "to be able to help someone get to that place where they feel beautiful in a split second." With summer wedding season in full swing, we asked each sister to style a look for an extra-special occasion. / Alayna Eberhart

CHEESE, PLEASE: The chamomile ricotta is so good you can eat it with a spoon

Good Eats: Cheese Stands Alone

The big draw at Shepard, Porter Square's much-anticipated collaboration between veteran chefs René Becker and Susan Regis, may be the wood-burning oven, but the kitchen has a talent for dairy products that you don't want to miss. Eat anything that comes with the house-cultured butter (grilled oysters, orecchiette, bread), but most of all order the chamomile ricotta. It's a smooth, fine version perfumed just right with wild chamomile that the staff forages locally. Scoop it up with the rich, tender rye crackers and honey that come alongside, or savor it by the spoonful. / Elizabeth Bomze

FRANK DE PASQUALE CANNOT HIDE HIS love for the North End, but the restaurateur is more than fine with hiding his latest restaurant. That's why Mare, which recently closed its Richmond Street location, opened its new location in late July in the Bricco Suites complex, down a brick alley off Hanover Street, with no signs visible from the popular tourist-filled street.

"We want to give people a way to get away from the fast tracks of Hanover or Parmenter Streets," De Pasquale says. "This is a hidden secret here. Not too many people know about it."

The location isn't the only thing new for Mare, which boasts white marble walls and light hardwood floors throughout. The capacity has almost doubled from its previous size, with indoor seating for 46 people at tables and a few bar stools and space for 90 more outside. The outdoor lounge features seats surrounding fire pits, while the outdoor dining area is covered by a retractable roof imported from Florence—and both spots on the back patio offer a view of the Financial District skyline.

"We basically have one of the best views in the whole city. At nighttime, it's just absolutely spectacular," De Pasquale says. "The music will be Miami-style, chill music. As the night goes on, the music gets louder. We have no abutters or anything, so we can give it a nice feel."

Befitting the name, Mare will remain a seafood restaurant, but De Pasquale and chef Nello Cacciopoli (Umbria, Bricco) have expanded the menu beyond familiar fillets for a more contemporary feel. There will be crudos, whole-fish preparations (from salted to cooked acqua pazza) and what De Pasquale calls one of the largest oyster selections in Boston. Diners can expect specials such as langoustine, onaga and branzino, along with a large selection of beers, plus wines from Europe and North America and a selection of cordials.

The fresh start for Mare in the old Ida's space coincides with a few other changes to De Pasquale's North End empire. Sfizi, a Mediterranean tapas spot, will open in the old Mare space in a couple of months. His first restaurant, Trattoria Il Panino, is celebrating its 30th anniversary by expanding into the adjacent Caffe Pompei, making room for a 40-seat bar and private function space. And his Bricco Suites have also grown in size. Luckily for De Pasquale, he says there's no shortage of business.

"The North End is busier and busier. We thought we might be hurt by these other neighborhoods moving forward in Boston, but the North End stays stronger," De Pasquale says. "This is Italy in the United States. It really is. Not just by name, but the food quality, the pastries, that neighborhood feel. You're not just leaving a restaurant and going home. You'll probably go have dessert somewhere else or walk around the neighborhood and chat with the people on the benches."

WHISK-Y BUSINESS

FOUR YEARS AGO, CHEFS JEREMY Kean and Philip Kruta started Whisk at Fiore's Bakery in Jamaica Plain before blazing a trail of pop-ups through Boston. Now they've come full circle, taking over JP's Fazenda Cafe and carefully making it their own, gradually transitioning to a full-service restaurant while operating as a cafe seven days a week.

"We always wanted to end up in JP. It's been quite the ride, but now the van is parked," Kean says. Setting up shop next to the Forest Hills T stop, the new owners of the cafe, which will keep its name for now, are going hyperlocal with everything from the doughnut ingredients ("I'm foraging black raspberries out of the Arboretum," Kean says) to the raw materials for the furnishings, which are being built by Kruta and installed after hours. "We found on Craigslist a huge garage bay full of 100-year-old chestnut. We bought it. It's under a tarp in my backyard," Kean says.

The Whisk team will schedule pop-up dinners two or three nights a month, "to go through the seasons as a supper club, get to know small farmers, forage in the woods." The next dinner, on Aug. 20 and 21, will feature ramen served in bowls made by a local potter, as well as roasted Island Creek oysters with thyme biscuits and nasturtium jelly. Kean is growing both the thyme and the nasturtium. A tasting of Japanese and American whiskeys will round out the evening, which will also include live blues.

Kean doesn't expect to start serving dinner full time until May. In the meantime, the 41-seat cafe is dishing out a roster of sandwiches on housemade sourdough bread (for example, smoked local chicken with homemade bacon and gochugaru peppers), locally roasted coffee from Fazenda's Dedham roaster (including cold-brew) and housemade doughnuts with flavors that change daily but will always rely on local fruit.

"We're preserving all the [summer] fruit," Kean says, citing strawberries from Ward's Berry Farm in Sharon. "In the middle of winter, you'll be able to have a strawberry doughnut."

PRETTY SWEET: Even the doughnuts feature foraged ingredients

Dream Catcher®

Legendary "Toasted" Irish Liqueur

The origins of Dream Catcher, an old Gaelic recipe, started in a historic farm house with a pot still in County Cavan, Ireland.

A farmer was inspired to blend an elixir of the natural flavor of toasted chestnuts and other superb ingredients with Premium Irish Spirits to create the taste of toasted Irish Liqueur. This wonderful treasure was discovered several years ago and is now coming to the world.

The farmer claimed it was a "Dream worth catching".

For a Great Irish Coffee

2 parts Hot Medium Coffee
1 part Hot Water
1 part Dream Catcher

Stir well. Add a splash of sweet whipped cream.
Optional: add sugar to taste.

Q&A
SHARK ATTACK

It's been 16 years since Kevin O'Leary sold the Learning Company for $4.2 billion, but the Marlborough Street resident didn't take the money and head off to retirement. He's since made a name for himself as Mr. Wonderful on ABC's Shork Tonk, investing in companies like Boston's Wicked Good Cupcakes, which he calls one of the most successful to ever come out of the show. The shark who believes "Business is war; it's not a social club" shared a few tricks of the trade. / Meghon Kovonough

SWEET TOOTH: O'Leary says he's the "nicest shark" on the show.

WHAT FINANCIAL LESSON DID YOU LEARN THE HARD WAY? No matter what anybody puts forward as a forecast, it's just that; it's a forecast. . Being flexible, being able to pivot and understanding that you're going to make mistakes with certainty—100 percent probability you're going to make mistakes—and in doing that you leave enough flexibility and you can actually adjust when those hits are taken. Most entrepreneurs that fail can't pivot. They can't adjust.

WHAT IS ONE OF THE BEST PRODUCTS ON THE MARKET TODAY? Well, obviously Uber has been extremely disruptive, very controversial, a service I use in every city I travel to around the world, when available

WHAT'S A MISCONCEPTION PEOPLE HAVE ABOUT YOU AFTER WATCHING THE SHOW? Well, I may be the only shark that tells the truth, and the reason I do is that I actually think I'm trying to help you save your money . If I tell you that your business has no merit and you're going to go bankrupt and waste all your family's money, I'm telling you that because it's true, and so you can cry now or cry later, after you're bankrupt. I'm not trying to make friends. I'm trying to make money .. So being honest caused me a reputation of being a mean shark but that's not true at all. I'm the nicest shark and the only one who tells the truth

YOU ENJOY WINE AND RECENTLY LAUNCHED O'LEARY FINE WINES. WHAT'S YOUR FAVORITE PLACE FOR GRABBING A GLASS IN BOSTON? I would have to say one of the best cellars is Grill 23. They particularly have a fantastic sommelier there

WHAT MAKES A SUCCESSFUL ENTREPRENEUR? A lot of these deals are very disruptive, they're very innovative, they're very risky, they're out-of-the-box thinkers...but the reason they're able to capture capital and the imagination of investors is they have these three attributes. So number one is they're always able to articulate their idea in 90 seconds or less. . Number two is they're able to articulate and explain a roadmap as to why they're the entrepreneurs that should execute the business plan .. And lastly, and this is the one that actually is the downfall of many that sound so promising initially if you don't know the numbers, you're dead

Impersonals
SPACE INVADERS

Dear Seat-saver: Last Sunday, my daughter and I ventured out to the SoWa market. We had never been to the food truck area before, so we decided to give it a try for a quick bite. Unbeknownst to us, trying to nab a seat is as difficult as finding a parking spot in winter. We just kept circling and circling with our arms full of drinks and sandwiches. Everyone was saving seats for someone else while members of their group waited in long lines for food. After asking numerous people, with no luck, if we could sit for a few minutes, we came across a gem of a gentleman. After explaining our plight he interrupted us with, "Save me your pity story. I'm saving these seats." When my daughter fairly begged to sit for just a few minutes, he shouted back, "Make sure you're gone in five minutes." My daughter opted to stand so she wouldn't have to get too close to the beast. After a seven-minute chow down, there still was no sign of the rest of his party. Hope you choke on your burrito, old man!

— Lost my appetite

Dear Umbrella Man: I wasn't "too close." You were too self-absorbed and selfish to put your door-sized umbrella down (like the rest of us did) until you were fully ensconced in the dry car on the Green Line. Then you didn't even apologize, only commented that I had been too close when you unloaded your bucket full of water onto my entire body. Karma.

— All wet

To Fellow Bostonians: The other day, I observed a foreign couple frantically trying to find their way to Derby Street in Hingham...from the Orange Line. As they hopelessly attempted to lock eyes with a seasoned T rider, I directed them 15 miles away to the South Shore so the newlyweds could travel to Banana Republic, the next stop on their honeymoon. After explaining for 20 minutes that Greenbush did not mean "green bus" and that Hingham was, in fact, not a part of Boston, the happy and confused couple went on their way. Moral of the story to fellow Bostonians: Join in solidarity and end the term Masshole! Help wandering strangers, please!

Kick the Cube to the Curb

Coworking spaces are giving entrepreneurs options besides long-term office leasing or camping out at a cafe. Here are some spots letting locals work—and play—together. / Hannah Landers

WORKBAR

COALITION is perched 19 stories high, offering newly renovated lounges, meeting rooms and a bar with a bird's-eye view of downtown. And it's easy to flock together, says community manager Samiha Al-Sabbagh, thanks to events like ice cream socials and happy hours

Officemates: Trext, whose software makes sending mass texts a bit easier, and TaskRabbit, a marketplace for locally outsourcing small jobs.

Perks: Ditch the long underwear come winter—the building that houses Coalition sits atop the Green, Red and Orange Lines, making it easy to commute without risking frostbite.

Monthly Price: Coworking for $99-$700, private workspaces for $1,450 and more.

101 Arch St., Suite 1950, Boston (617-807-0940) coalitionspace.com

DISTRICT HALL aims to serve as a "front door to the innovation community in Boston," according to general manager Nicole Fichera. The first public center of its kind, it provides both meeting space and a programming schedule packed with networking opportunities and office hours with local experts.

Officemates: Biopharm company Keryx and the city's ONEin3 Council

Perks: The only writing on the walls at District Hall is on the dry-erase paint. Customizable color-changing LED lights and a piano help drive home the "whistle while you work" approach.

Monthly Price: Free

75 Northern Ave., Boston (617-982-3213) districthallboston.org

OFICIO founders Charlie Weisman and Nima Yadollahpour have dealt with the headaches of starting a business, so they zeroed in on three workspace essentials: the comfort of home, the social aspects of a coffee shop and the professional setting of a typical office—minus fluorescent lights and cubicles.

Officemates: Office manicure service Manicube and restaurant group B good

Perks: In its recent expansion at 129 Newbury, members can wine and dine guests with the bar cart or free monthly food deliveries from local businesses

Monthly Price: Coworking for $69-$299, dedicated workspaces for $299-$1,999

WEWORK designs each location around shared spaces like the kitchen, cementing bonds with a busy events calendar

Officemates: Mighty Squirrel beer, meal-delivery service The Purple Carrot

Perks: Imbibe in a free drink of your choice, from coffee to fruit-infused water to beer, as you take a break from that budget report to play a quick game of air hockey in the arcade

Monthly Price: Coworking for $45, dedicated workspaces for $400, private offices for $550-$3,300

745 Atlantic Ave., Boston; 51 Melcher St., Boston (877-583-3185) wework.com

WORKBAR is made up of four "neighborhoods," each providing a distinct work atmosphere—the Commons has booths and energetic yellow and orange decor, while the Study is a cool blue and provides access to white noise machines.

Officemates Event locator Roundtown and Automattic, the web developer behind Wordpress

Perks: Feeling lethargic? Try the treadmill desk. Stressed out? Take a trip to the Zen Room. Just be back in time for Workbar Wins, a happy-hour competition where members share their best news for a chance at a prize

Monthly Price: Coworking for $125-$600, dedicated workspaces for $400-$3,000

Drink of the Moment
EAST END SMASH

PRICE: $12

INGREDIENTS: Corralejo silver tequila, lemon, raw cane sugar, cold-pressed ginger-beet juice, mint

TASTE: The veggie and fruit juice complements the neutral tequila, which also brings a touch of earthiness. "You get a little bite, but it's not overpowering," beverage manager Chris Huarte explains, encouraging non-tequila drinkers to give it a try. "This isn't like a margarita."

FLAVOR: Don't let the root vegetable scare you off. Huarte reassures. "It's not the beet juice your grandmother used to try to make."

BACKSTORY: Huarte and sous-chef Rose Pena got the juices flowing around the same time as the bar program's relaunch last summer. Señor Pimm, a play on the British classic, is another in the current lineup, featuring Espólon Blanco tequila and cold-pressed melon juice ($10).

BAMBARA
Hotel Marlowe
25 Edwin H. Land Blvd

HOUSE STYLE: "Nothing with a label goes on the bar other than the spirits," Huarte says. "Our syrups are made in house, and we like to incorporate a lot of fresh herbs into our cocktails."

PAIR IT WITH: The arugula salad with pickled beet, goat cheese and spicy walnuts ($9). Or opt for the summer vegetable fricassee, full of heirloom tomatoes, sweet corn, fava beans and polenta ($22). Already hit your daily serving of greens? "It's also not a bad dessert cocktail," Huarte adds, suggesting the warm caramel date cake topped with vanilla ice cream ($8). It's all about balance. / Soroh Hogmon

Make a booze run at Appleton Estate, a distillery that's been producing rum since the mid-18th century and is now home to 250,000 oak barrels aging the goods for up to 50 years. Tour, taste and take some home.

Only an hour's drive away is Negril, home to the world-famous Seven Mile Beach, Rick's Cafe (a hopping cliffside bar where tourists gather liquid courage before jumping into the sea) and—if you, ahem, swing that way—the notorious nude resort Hedonism II.

TOP OF THE HILL: Beachy luxury awaits in Montego Bay.

The Escape Artist / Scott Kearnan

IRIE APPEAL

HIT A HISTORIC MONTEGO BAY RESORT AND EXPLORE JAMAICA'S NORTH COAST.

MONTEGO BAY, JAMAICA. IT'S FAMOUS for its gorgeous beaches, its awe-inspiring sunsets and being name-checked in that Beach Boys song. (Even if they did wind up going to Kokomo in the end.) And it's just the kind of place where you'd love to find a posh island villa on which to descend en masse with a crew of your best frenemies, Real Housewives style, for a week's worth of Champagne and air kisses.

We've found the setting: Round Hill Hotel and Villas. Opened in the 1950s on what was once a sugar plantation, the historic high-end resort boasts about two-dozen villas perched on a tropical flower-filled beachside slope. They're all ideal for group getaways, and Round Hill—rather quiet, cloistered and refined—is what your posse will appreciate once (you can admit that) you've outgrown the nightclub scenes at those ultra-contemporary island properties that possess all the indigenous charm of an oceanfront Cheesecake Factory overflowing with Ed Hardy bathing suits. From the warm, grinning stewards in crisp cotton suits to the villas themselves—outfitted with tile-lined pool patios, lanais of slatted white woods and living rooms and bedrooms boasting rich finishes—Round Hill is the kind of storied Caribbean resort that offers whiffs of orchids and the ghosts of upper-crust guests who bore honorifics like Lord, Lady and Countess. (We don't mean LuAnn.)

Take Villa 25, once owned by dancer Adele Astaire (Fred's sister) and the site where a vacationing John F. Kennedy wrote and rehearsed his inauguration speech. (We're pretty sure it started with "My fellow Americans—be cool, don't be all uncool.") It's a 3,400-square-foot hideaway with three bedrooms, a pool and a full kitchen, where breakfast is made for you daily. During the Caribbean offseason, it can be had for $1,759 per night. Daunting, but do the math: That's less than $300 per person if you round up three couples to share the pad, relatively reasonable by the standards of Caribbean oceanfront compounds. In fact, all villa prices plummet through Oct. 31—so you and your cronies can book the same digs where flamboyant British playwright Noel Coward, Round Hill's first shareholder, vacationed (Villa 3), where Oscar Hammerstein, a then-owner, wrote much of The Sound of Music (Villa 12) or even where Stella got her groove back. (Villa 11 was the setting for the movie, and star Taye Diggs later married Idina Menzel at Round Hill.)

Of course, you don't have to splurge on the suite life. Steps from the beach and the infinity pool is the Pineapple House, which contains a series of sea-facing guest rooms for singles and couples, swathed in white linens and personally appointed by Ralph Lauren, who owns not one but two homes on the Round Hill property. You'll crash here after a day of snorkeling, water skiing or cruising around the bay on a glass-bottom boat—and you're that much closer to the beach bar pouring tropical tipples and the bi-level beachfront restaurant serving modern Caribbean cuisine. A meandering pierside path leads to the spa, where tropical showers and body scrubs with Jamaican coffee beans await, and the newly renovated yoga pavilion and fitness center, which is wrapped in glass walls so you won't miss the ocean view while you're on the elliptical.

When it's time to explore the island, make the most of Round Hill-facilitated excursions around the lush, rainforest-filled Montego Bay region. You can take a dune buggy safari through mountains or zip line across them, dip in mineral springs or ride a 30-foot bamboo raft down the green waters of the serpentine Martha Brae River, hand feed native birds at Rockland's Bird Sanctuary or frolic with Flipper at Dolphin Cove Jamaica (also home to sharks, snakes and various other friends of feather, fur and fin).

But the real must-visit has to be YS Falls. It's worth the 80-minute drive inland to reach the seven-tiered waterfall that cascades into pools where visitors soak, splash and—for the cost of a few dollars as a tip—leap from rope swings given a good heave-ho by local guides in wait. There's a zip line course, gardens for wandering and a small shanty slinging spicy jerk chicken for noshing at picnic tables. Kokomo could never. ◆

BISQ
1071 Cambridge St., Cambridge
bisqcambridge.com

Cambridge and Somerville are the loci of a certain beloved kind of restaurant in our dining scene: chef-owned, scrupulous about sourcing, artful without being too arty. They form the left bank of the Charles in few ways: more bohemian, less slick than the Boston side of the river, with a determined informality. During the past couple of years, prominent indies like Craigie on Main, Oleana and Journeyman have done second-act openings (Kirkland, Sarma and Ames Street/Study) that skew even more casual. You can add Inman Square's new BISq to this set of tandems: It's the funkier twin to Somerville's 5-year-old indie hit Bergamot, from the team of chef Keith Pooler and wine director Kai Gagnon, with former Bergamot sous-chef Dan Bazzinotti helming the kitchen.

The menu opens with a useful focus on small plates. Ceviche ($7) of hake in the traditional Peruvian lime/chili marinade called tiger's milk packs a subtle yet insistent heat and adds the welcome crunch of cancha, giant kernels of parched corn. Salmon tiradito ($12) is the first of many dishes with truly lovely platings and ringing, clear flavors, again showing Peruvian influence with aji Amarillo, purple potato and crunchy quinoa. Lemon and herb focaccia ($5) could hardly be simpler, with squares of soft bread atop a pool of confit shallots, but it's smashing. Green gazpacho ($8) of grapes and cucumbers with smoked almonds, crème fraiche and a crunchy cornbread crumble deftly balances subtle, sweet flavors and gentle textures with bracing acidity. Herb-marinated beets with raita and crunchy squares of sunflower-seed granola ($7) surprises as an original, delectable reinvention of the trite beets-and-tangy-dairy combo. Heirloom tomato salad ($12) combines fine California tomatoes with housemade burrata dressed with a vegetarian XO sauce and tomato molasses, again elevating elemental flavors with high-craft touches.

The chef is rightly proud of his meat and charcuterie chops, evident in pork belly/honey butter ($5) and cracklins with diced pickled mango, served with crackers. Whipped lardo ($6) is another superb spread for shortbread, scoring big with the witty counterpoint of lightly pickled strawberries. Betty's mazzafegati ($7) is a terrific grilled pork-liver sausage with orange rind, a distant Italian cousin to loucanico. The austerity of a generous slice of paprika-dusted, EVOO-kissed manchego artesano ($10) is wonderfully offset with wee savory/sweet buñuelos.

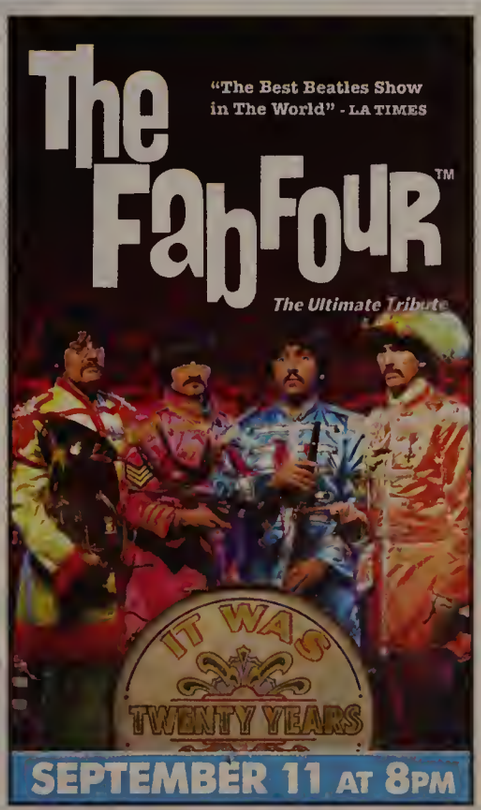
Cooked dishes feature additional standouts like corn and prosciutto "bisq" ($14), its novel cob-based broth supporting a complex stew of sherried chambrelle mushrooms, lentils and cabbage crowned with a fried oyster: salty and creamy and sweet, marvelous. Substantial, satisfying tomato-braised summer squashes ($8) with egg and parmesan could be mistaken for a rich Southern Italian pasta dish. Roasted bone marrow ($12) yields a generous portion of "God's butter" but unnecessarily gilds the lily with pickled kumquats, sweetish kabayaki sauce and shredded crispy short rib, a rare bit of kitchen overkill. Cherry-glazed lamb ribs ($16) are better balanced, a generous stack of crisp, meaty ribs ably complemented by fierce green-garlic chermoula. The San Agustín sliders ($10) are near-perfect little sandwiches of pork belly, creamy avocado and zingy pickled-onion-based salsa criolla.

The two desserts are both fabulous. A liquid cheesecake trifle ($9) evokes a gourmand's dream of a brownie sundae, and the dazzling dessert charcuterie for two ($12) arrays novel treats like a thick slice of chocolate "salami," white chocolate-dipped biscotti and Chex-and-chocolate "muddy buddies" on a serving board.



Gagnon's wine program features a useful 17-deep selection of food-friendly wines by the glass ($10-$16), many from lesser-known regions of France and Central Europe. Especially intriguing were the 2014 Renardat-Fache Cerdon du Bugey rosé ($12), a slightly sweet, floral pink sparkler from Eastern France, and the 2012 Maurice Schoech Vieille Vigne Pinot Auxerrois ($13), an off-dry Alsatian white. For more deep-pocketed oenophiles, there's a lengthy, serious bottle list with a mid-point north of $100. Among the too-few options under $60, the 2012 Clos de La Roilette Fleurie Beaujolais ($53) delighted us with its juicy crispness and light body.

The long, narrow room has barely 50 seats, including a few dining-bar seats entertainingly overlooking the open kitchen's charcuterie station, giving way to a cozily small, dimly lit bar in the rear. Wooden tables and floors, charcoal-toned walls, exposed brick, wine-bottle accents and a rotating selection of local art contribute to the space's rustic, homey feel. Service is informal and on-point, but ask for Gagnon or one of his lieutenants for help with wine pairings. At first blush, BISq can seem pricey for a casual wine bar. By the end of the meal, though, the tiny, exquisite details, sheer craft, sophisticated conceptions and balanced flavors in Bazzinotti's cooking make the check seem like a good value. It's another in a line of gifted Camberville kids that should rightly make their elder siblings proud. ◆

DEALING IN DECEPTION

A LOCAL ART SECURITY EXPERT'S SECOND BOOK INVESTIGATES SOME FASCINATING FRAUDS.

The Art of the Con* by Anthony M. Amore
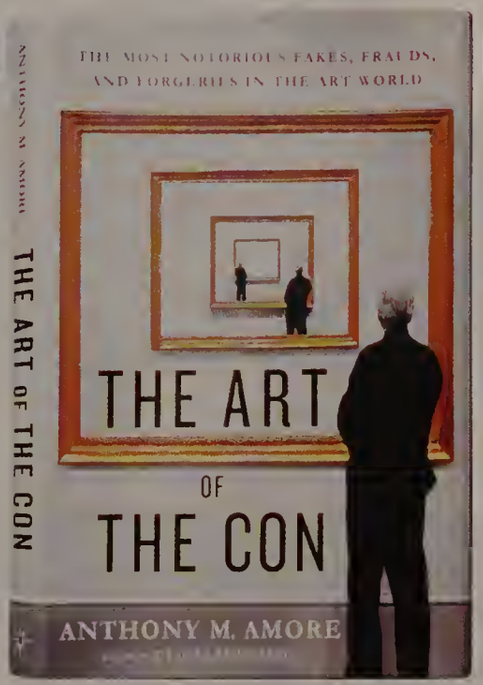
Published by St. Martin's Press. 272 pages. $26



GARDNER MUSEUM DIRECTOR OF SECURITY Anthony Amore knows art theft, the subject of his first book, Stealing Rembrandts. But art crime encompasses more than headline-making heists. Here, we meet forgers who copy actual paintings and fake "unknown" works of famous artists. Amore details the snakelike slithering of these dishonest dealers, as well as the naive decisions of the art-hungry buyers.

They include the dastardly Wolfgang Beltracchi, who used a vintage camera to photograph his wife posing as her own grandmother with supposedly surrealist works he'd painted himself; having thus established provenance, he sold them for outrageous sums. One even hung brazenly in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. But the talented charlatan was eventually outed by an analysis of the too-modern paint.

Then there's Ely Sakhai, a seemingly benign donor to Jewish charities concerned with looted Nazi art. He made millions hiring Chinese immigrants to copy paintings he owned by Chagall, Renoir, Monet and—going way back—Rembrandt. But when Christie's and Sotheby's each found themselves with a version of the same Gauguin, the FBI came calling.

Even the upper crustiest galleries can fall victim to cons. New York's Knoedler & Company had dealings with a suspiciously named "Mr. X," and its president Ann Freedman bought a Jackson Pollock signed "Pollok." Such scandals caused the gallery to close after 165 years. In page-turning prose, Amore shows how often a small, stupid mistake brings scams to light.

FROM PAGE 193: But phony paintings live a different life. They hang on walls in homes, galleries, and even muséums. They are like amateur boxers, jutting out their glass jaws and daring the observer to punch. ◆

FAKE-ATION

THIS NOSTALGIA-DRIVEN ROAD TRIP OFFERS A BUMPY RIDE

RUSTY GRISWOLD, LOOKING VERY LITTLE like he did when he first appeared as a gawky 14-year-old in 1983's National Lampoon's Vacation, stands before his wife and children in this fifth film in a series that hasn't seen a new entry in more than 18 years, announcing a shakeup of the family's stale annual trip to a cabin in the woods.

"Guys, I have exciting news," beams the regional pilot for low-rent airline Econo-Air. "My trip to Walley World when I was a kid was the best time I ever had," he says, telling them of his intention to drive them 2,000 miles from Chicago to the fictional California theme park where his father, Clark, experienced a hilariously criminal meltdown during the climax of the '83 classic.

"So, you just want to redo your vacation from 30 years ago?" asks Rusty's bewildered wife, Debbie (Christina Applegate), who'd rather take the same old boring trip to the country than be stuck in a car with screaming kids for two weeks. "Don't you think that's gonna be kind of a letdown?"

"No, no, no," he protests. "We're not redoing anything. This will be completely different. For one thing, the original vacation had a boy and a girl; this one has two boys," he says, looking over at his son James (Skyler Gisondo) and the teenager's younger brother, Kevin (Steele Stebbins), adding, "I'm sure that there will be lots of other differences."

The boys aren't thrilled, either. "I've never even heard of the original vacation..." James says.

"Doesn't matter!" Rusty excitedly tells them during his winking meta-monologue. "The new vacation will stand on its own."

If only. This big-screen directorial debut by writing partners John Francis Daley and Jonathan M. Goldstein (the screenwriting duo behind the two Horrible Bosses "comedies") is yet another of this summer's films—like Jurassic World and Terminator Genisys—that trades in nostalgic callbacks to the superior first films in their respective series while disregarding the sequels that came after. Little more than big-budget fan fiction, each of these films replicates what people liked in the originals, without understanding that what audiences really responded to was the originality. Recasting key roles (disastrously, in the case of the latest Terminator) only reinforces the fact that you're watching a bigger, louder knockoff.

[Rusty] risks going off the deep end in his quest to do something he blindly sees as good for his family.

Which isn't to say that Ed Helms is a bad choice for Rusty, who, like his sister Audrey (Leslie Mann), has been played by different actors (Anthony Michael Hall, Jason Lively, Johnny Galecki and Ethan Embry) in each film. The pinch-hitting co-star of The Hangover movies and TV's The Office becomes the lead batter in this cross-country drive, and he does a fine job of playing Rusty's father's son.

There wasn't an ounce of cynicism in Chevy Chase's portrayal of family patriarch Clark Griswold in the original film, which featured an early, semi-autobiographical script by the late John Hughes and was helmed by late actor/director Harold Ramis. Chase and Beverly D'Angelo (playing Clark's understanding wife, Ellen) are the only actors who appear in each of the Vacation films, and the loving, eternally optimistic, woefully mediocre man who truly believes in the American Dream has successfully passed these qualities (for better or worse) on to his son.

Like his dad, Helms' Rusty is a decent, put-upon man who provides a suburban life for his wife and kids, but who risks going off the deep end in his quest to do something he blindly sees as good for his family. How else to explain Rusty's inscrutable decision to travel back to Walley World, which his father once saw as a quest. Toward the end of Clark's earlier journey, he famously raged at his family: "I think you're all fucked in the head! We're 10 hours from the fucking fun park and you want to bail out! Well, I'll tell you something. This is no longer a vacation. It's a quest! It's a quest for fun! I'm gonna have fun, and you're gonna have fun... We're all gonna have so much fucking fun, we're gonna need plastic surgery to remove our goddamn smiles! You'll be whistling 'Zip-A-Dee-Doo-Dah' out of your assholes!"

Now that's a monologue, minus the winks that are this film's stock-in-trade. Just look at the names of Rusty's kids: Kevin, James. I can't be the only one to think that it's not a coincidence that the latest additions to the Griswold clan combine to form the name of a lazy comic actor who's appeared in not one, but three of the worst films of the year: Paul Blart: Mall Cop 2, Little Boy and the current box office bust Pixels, yet another film that fails with its reliance on nostalgia.

Mind you, the movie containing Rusty's quest isn't as dumbfoundingly awful as the stinkers mentioned above, and there are sporadic laughs and off-the-roadmap surprises in store—if you haven't seen the ubiquitous trailers and TV spots for the film.

Now if only there were a way to take a vacation from ruinous marketing... ◆

THE CHALLENGER

THE BUSY L.A. SAXOPHONIST BLURS GENRES TO BUILD AN "EPIC" ALBUM

KAMASI WASHINGTON CONJURES HEARTY tenor sax and lush string arrangements on Kendrick Lamar's new hip-hop landmark To Pimp a Butterfly. But Washington's solo debut—a three-CD jazz set titled The Epic—unspools a more ambitious achievement.

Washington, who's also worked with Snoop Dogg, Lauryn Hill and Raphael Saadiq, says he didn't intend to make a triple album—much less one boasting a 32-piece orchestra and a 20-person choir. Its scope developed after he enlisted eight fellow musicians from L.A. collective the West Coast Get Down to join him in the studio.

"We created our own little music sweatshop," Washington says of daily sessions that lasted 16 hours. "They wanted to record too, so they went in on the cost and we booked a studio out for a whole month. We didn't take any gigs or anything."

They ended up recording 190 songs, 45 of them belonging to Washington, who reduced his tracks to 17 and then started on string and choir parts. "I was doing it late at night and would literally fall asleep in the studio with a pencil in my hand, and one night I had this crazy dream," the saxophonist/composer says of a recurring dream about an aging gatekeeper who awaited young challengers.

That provided the storyline behind "Change of the Guard," the 12-minute opening to The Epic, an expansive May release that spans Coltrane-esque sax eruptions, chill melodies closer to smooth jazz, hip-hop accents, choral swells and Afro-Latin polyrhythms. It's a free-wheeling yet cohesive project, rounded out with a tribute to Malcolm X as well as a take on Debussy's impressionistic classical piece Clair de Lune, managing to sound both avant-garde and accessible.

"Terms we put on the music are just an organizational tool—they shouldn't affect the music," says Washington, 34. "All these different styles aren't disconnected. They're totally connected. Snoop's band was mostly jazz musicians."

Experiences with Snoop Dogg changed his approach, Washington says. "Like what tone I used on the horn, frequencies. The groove had to sit exactly in a certain place, and it was all contingent.... I had to listen in this hyper-microscopic way. When I took that mentality over to jazz, it was like a whole new style of music opened to my consciousness."

"All these different styles aren't disconnected. They're totally connected. Snoop's band was mostly jazz musicians."

His comrades in the West Coast Get Down had similar grounding in non-jazz gigs, though they were schooled together from a young age. "We've all known each other since we were kids," Washington says of bandmates such as upright bassist Miles Mosley, drummer Ronald Bruner Jr. and his brother Stephen "Thundercat" Bruner, an electric bass virtuoso. "We were really focused, really dedicated. We didn't go to parties or anything like that. We were just gigging and practicing eight or nine hours a day, then going to jam sessions and sneaking into clubs."

Washington's parents were both wind players and educators, though he was lured by hip-hop and gangs. "They were a reality of where I grew up, where all of us grew up," the Inglewood native says. The turning point came at about age 11 when an older cousin gave him a tape with jazz great Art Blakey. "I was into N.W.A. at that point, and I don't know if Blakey reminded me of [Dr.] Dre's production, but I just liked it. It got me into music at a higher level."

Another jazz friend from his youth, alto saxophonist Terrace Martin, became a hip-hop producer who not only gave Washington his shot with Snoop Dogg but pulled him into secretive sessions for Lamar's album after hearing The Epic.

"Kendrick didn't inhibit the musicians he worked with," Washington says. "He let us put our whole spirit, our whole essence, into the music, which is rare.... It kind of dispelled this myth that people can't understand highly dense music."

That kind of spirit infuses The Epic as well as a tour that hits the Sinclair on Aug. 20. Washington's live septet will include drummers Bruner and Tony Austin, bassist Mosley, trombonist Ryan Porter and singer Patrice Quinn, all from the album. "When it's a smaller band," the saxophonist says, "you get more of each person." ◆

GUN SHY

SHOOTING THROUGH SOME MISGIVINGS.

WHEN MY FRIEND JOE ASKED IF I wanted to go shoot some guns, I envisioned the sort of thing I used to do back in Maine—plinking a target with a .22 or bursting a gallon jug of water with a lever-action rifle. Even though I don't own a gun, at some point my kids are going to end up at someone's house where there is a gun, and I want to demystify the whole topic and lay down the rules. So a little refresher wouldn't hurt. The location: a private outdoor range on a secluded farm.

Joe is a military guy. Special Forces. And this gathering was a word-of-mouth event among his peers. Now, in the movies, Special Forces guys are depicted as super-jacked, studly badasses who could kill you with their left pinky finger. In real life, though, that's not really the case. They'd probably use an index finger.

A fellow named Dan introduced himself. One of his calves was emblazoned with a tattoo of the Grim Reaper, or maybe a skull with a scythe, but in any case a much more menacing tattoo than my tattoo. (I have no tattoo because needles are hurty.) "Which group are you?" he asked, assuming that I was also a total badass—a common mistake. "I'm a writer," I replied. This information was met with a response that I'd describe as "polite confusion." I hoped Joe wouldn't get in trouble for bringing a guy who needs to be reminded which way the bullets go in the gun.

Dan brought me over to meet the owner of the property, a tall guy named Henry. "When I hear these boys out here, that's the sound of freedom," Henry said. I am generally a cynic, one who thinks the word "freedom" is often misappropriated to justify craven behavior. (You don't want me to smoke in this hospital nursery? What, you hate freedom?) But my insistent urge to veer toward the snarky or ironic ran headlong into the freight train of his earnest admiration for these guys. "Yup," I agreed. That said, Sound of Freedom would be a great name for a Toby Keith album, with cover art depicting a screaming bald eagle wearing a jean jacket and rolling coal in an F-350.

While I didn't bring a gun, there were plenty to go around, mainly M4s, the primary weapon used by the military. "You can use the AK," Joe said, producing a Bulgarian AK-47 from the bed of his truck. Beyond Ice Cube lyrics, the AK-47 is the gun of choice in all of the world's finest hellholes. So if your occupation involves going to those hellholes, it behooves you to develop some familiarity. This is the standard-issue bad-guy gun. I slung it around my neck and jauntily declared, "Off to join ISIS!" Military people tend to embrace gallows humor, but Henry—standing within earshot—certainly did not. He grimaced and muttered something about ISIS being no good. Note to self: No ISIS jokes in front of the guy who owns his own gun range.

The remainder of the morning was spent experiencing varying degrees of emasculation as Joe and his friends gradually realized that I didn't know how to do anything. You ever use a speed-loader? No. You know how to hold the gun while you load the clip? No. Did you bring gloves? No? OK, well, that barrel's gonna get pretty hot. It's like, hello, have you ever even shot an AK-47 before?

I'd envisioned that the shooting action would feature me holding the gun down by my waist and screaming "Arrrgghh!" as tracers lit up the landscape and then, off in the distance, things exploded. It's a little more mundane than that. We did a timed exercise where you shoot 10 rounds standing, 10 rounds sitting and 10 more from a prone position, then add up your score on the target. The guy running the exercise, Neil, stressed breathing and form. It was like yoga with muzzle flashes. And just like yoga, I sucked at it. Excuse me, Neil? I'm stuck in Constipated Iguana pose.

Guns are obviously a fraught topic, especially these kinds of guns—semi-automatic rifles with high-capacity clips. But whatever you think of guns in general, you can't have a qualm with what these guys were doing: practicing for the day in the not-distant future when they'll be shipped off to a place where the bullets fly both ways. It's like if I spent a Saturday learning how to use all the features of the latest Microsoft Word. Sometimes I loathe myself.

When I bid farewell, I said thanks to the commandos for accommodating a useless writer. "Hey, the pen is mightier than the sword," Dan said, trying to make me feel better. Yeah, right on. I have a skill set too. And if anyone needs to learn how to format a document, I can do it with my left pinky finger. ◆

ROCKIN' ROLE

THE ACTOR AND COMEDIAN RIFFS ON HIS NEW SHOW, HANGING WITH KEITH RICHARDS AND SMOKING WITH THE FONZ.

MULTI-HYPHENATE DENIS LEARY, 57, WAS BORN and raised in Worcester and graduated from Emerson College. His acerbic stand-up persona led to an acting career that began on MTV in the 1990s. He has appeared in more than 40 films, and his TV show Rescue Me ran for seven seasons. His latest series, Sex&Drugs&Rock&Roll, premiered last month on FX.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So out of sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll, which one's your favorite?
DENIS LEARY: Oh, boy. You gotta go with sex. I would hope that would be everyone's No. 1 answer, and if not, there's something wrong. But I guess I can't speak for everybody.

Emerson College: Is it secretly controlling Hollywood? Pretty close. When I think back to the amount of talent I went to Emerson with—Mario Cantone, Stephen Wright, Gina Gershon—it's mind-boggling. I remember graduating in 1980, and my friend Doug, who ran WERS, was like, "I'm going to New York. This guy has an idea for a channel that plays nothing but music videos." And we were like, "Good luck with that!" Now he runs just about every other television network in the world.

Henry Winkler encounters? Well, he was a little bit older than me, but I went to Emerson on a scholarship, and I had to work as a security guard. Henry Winkler was already the Fonz, probably the biggest TV star at the time, and once a year, he'd come to Emerson to speak to the acting students. They assigned me to be one of his security guards. He wasn't allowed to smoke in public, because he was supposed to be this role model, but he smoked. So I was the guy who'd take him into a secret room, and we'd smoke. Decades went by, and I ran into him at some awards show. And he walked up to me and said, "You're the guy who used to take me into the secret smoking room." I couldn't believe he remembered that.

Funniest person you've ever known? My mother. She's 88. She's probably going to live to be 135. She lives in Worcester. She came over on the boat. And that's where I get my smartass, brazen personality. She will tell you the truth, no matter what. She just doesn't care. She loves the Bruins, and I once took her to some charity thing. I introduced her to Bobby Orr, and she said, "Oh, you're so handsome. You take such good care of yourself." Then she turned to Derek Sanderson and said, "You ruined your life! You threw it all away!"

The new show is like Shameless meets Californication meets Nashville. Wow! How's that for a descriptive one-liner?

What were you thinking when you came up with the idea? Well, at Emerson, we did original shows with original music, so some of the music students were the band. They all went on to be professional musicians. One of them writes all the music for SpongeBob SquarePants, and some became legit rock musicians. One of them played with the Del Fuegos, and the drummer played with Ozzy Osbourne.... I saw bands that were supposed to make it and didn't. They almost all failed for the same reason: The lead singer and the lead guitar player both hate each other and love each other. It's always a dysfunctional family dynamic. I thought it would be interesting to play with that, with a fictional band that didn't quite make it. They can't live with each other. They can't live without each other.

"I spent all my time at the Rat. I even roadied for a few of the bands that were hot in the new wave and punk scene."

Did you want to be a rock star? Yeah, in that late-'70s period in Boston, I had so many friends in bands. I spent all my time at the Rat. I even roadied for a few of the bands that were hot in the new wave and punk scene. A couple of times, I got up and sang, and I'd say, "Yeah, I think I can do this." And they were all like, "Ahh, no you can't." [Laughs.]

Rock star you'd most like to change places with? That's a great question. I have several favorites, but I guess it would have to be Mick Jagger. He's the biggest rock star who's ever lived, and he's 72, dating a 28-year-old Spanish ballerina.

Back in the day, how much money do you think you spent on blow? The truth is, back in the old, old days, we all got paid under the table. I was working as a comic at the same time I was working the door at places like the Ding Ho. Everything was kinda free. The drinks were free. The drugs were free a lot of the time. My rent was cheap; I was sharing an apartment in Cambridge with Jimmy Tingle and Steve Sweeney. We had it great.

Playing Diego in the Ice Age movies—easiest payday you ever had? I'll tell you, it's not bad. There's no makeup. There's no hair. You go in in a pair of sweatpants and a T-shirt, talk into the electric stick for three or four hours. There's a lot of improv in those movies, though. [John] Leguizamo does his thing, and then we come in. But making stuff up in a recording studio? Doesn't really get much easier than that.

Does comedy always come from anger? I think it comes from two places: anger and repression. I did 12 years at St. Peter's in Worcester, with all the same nuns. I had 17 cousins who lived in my neighborhood, and we were in the older group. We were just evil to the nuns, so there was really no hope for anybody. By fourth or fifth grade, we were like, "This is bullshit," but we had to put up with it. And the two things the nuns always said were "It's not funny," and "Stop laughing." So of course, that egged us on.

Favorite movie you were ever in? The Ref was a blast to make. It was directed by my friend Ted Demme, and they cast Kevin Spacey, who was unknown then but was a friend from the New York acting scene. Same with Christine Baranski. Everybody was hysterical. We laughed our asses off. The other one is probably Wag the Dog, which was also a ton of improvisation. And it was Robert De Niro, Dustin Hoffman, Willie Nelson. I went to work every day with a hall of fame. During breaks in the scenes, we'd go out on the lawn, and Willie would take out his guitar and say, "Anything you guys want to hear?" It was insane.

Response to someone who says you're glorifying drug use? Well, I guess: Welcome to reality. [Laughs.] And let me point out that I've spent a little time with Keith Richards over the years, and he doesn't forget a thing and remembers everybody's name. ◆

THE FUTURE IS NOW!

Or it at least feels that way in the Boston area. Between our buzzing startup scene and the research of our world-class hospitals and universities, the distance between the possible and the impossible seems smaller than ever. Here are choice cuts from the cutting edge.

OUT OF THIS WORLD

Somerville resident Chris Patil is in the running for the trip of a lifetime: a one-way ticket to Mars. Two years ago, the scientific editor—and 200,000 other people—submitted applications to Mars One, a group hoping to send a crew to the planet in 2026. "My 9-year-old self would kick my ass if I didn't apply," says Patil, now one of 100 finalists. The 24 astronauts will be selected in the fall of 2016; in the meantime, we chatted with him about the next giant leap for mankind. / Sarah Hagman

SO WHAT WOULD YOU PACK? People expect me to say I'd bring a picture of my mom, which I wouldn't. I would take electronic versions of those sorts of things. Every cubic centimeter that I can fill with something that's non-essential, I would fill with spices because they're very efficient. You don't have to use a lot of them; years' and years' supply of spices fit into a kilogram of mass, and it would be hugely psychologically beneficial to be able to flavor our food in interesting ways. And I love to cook.... We'd be eating, at first, things that we brought from Earth and then increasingly supplementing it with food that we grew. Obviously that would be pretty much a vegan diet, although I have hopes that things like small fish and crickets might be brought with the astronauts. But we'll definitely be eating our greens on the red planet.

WHAT WOULD YOU WANT IN A CREWMATE? Someone who's forgiving. The one thing that's true of all of us is that we're all going to make mistakes.... I'd also like them to have technical sophistication and the ability to learn. You couldn't put four empathetic people with no other abilities on a rocket ship to Mars and expect them to do well.

WHAT WOULD THEIR RESPONSIBILITIES BE? One is scientific research, which to me is one of the most important motivating reasons to go to Mars. There are questions we can ask and answer there that we can't answer on Earth—having to do with the origin of the planet and whether the planet ever hosted life or maybe, fantasy result, maybe it still does somewhere deep under the surface—that we just can't get done with robotic explorers. Aside from the research, things like growing crops to supplement our diet, maintaining the atmospheric control system, will be a bigger part of your life than being a home owner on Earth; that's for sure. And then the other part is preparing the habitation for expansion. Mars One's plan involves sending a new crew of four individuals every two years and two months. Things like constructing habitats, covering them with Martian soil so that they're protected from radiation, digging to expand new territories that can be pressurized and lived in—so when the next crew arrives, the first crew can basically say, "Here are the keys; welcome to your home."

WHAT QUESTIONS ARE YOU STILL TRYING TO ANSWER? One question I have is, how are we going to get the money? Mars One is this hybrid public-private partnership. The mission itself is not-for-profit, but it's going to receive funds from the private arm of the organization, and they're going to do things like sell the broadcast rights to the landing.... All that payout comes at the end of the beginning when we've trained astronauts for 10-12 years, bought a rocket, figured out all of the technical details and gotten everyone to Mars. Why would anyone invest in that right now when they could do something else with their money? And so I don't understand the funding model. I guess I'm skeptical.

BUT YOU THINK IT'S WORTH PURSUING? I think it's a great opportunity to encourage kids to pursue technical fields. Why should I care about math? You need to know about math because you need to know about rocket trajectories. You need to know about it because someday a rocket is going to take you to your new home somewhere other than Earth. But if you want to be a part of that, you really need to study math. And kids get it right away.

FLASH FORWARD

What might life be like in 2030? We tapped some innovative local pros for their predictions.

"HTML and CSS will be part of the elementary school language arts program, user experience design will be taught in high school art classes, and college students will 'study abroad' at tech companies."

A GERM OF AN IDEA

David Whitlock hasn't showered in more than a decade. He doesn't need to. The chemical engineer and cofounder of AOBiome—a Cambridge startup pioneering the use of live bacteria in skin health products—practices what he preaches.

ON LIFE IN 2030

"Tech will be significantly more diverse. Right now the casual observer might be excused for thinking that the tech industry's diversity problem is close to being resolved. Yes, it is a topic of serious and repeated conversations, articles, etc., and yes, there are many groups and initiatives focused on encouraging people from underrepresented groups to build and create (rather than simply consume) technology, but progress is slow. In 15 years, we're looking forward to seeing the fruit of the seeds being planted today."

Susan Buck, cofounder of the Women's Coding Collective and instructor at Wellesley College and the Harvard Extension School

"It's a crazy data point! He doesn't have any skin issues; he doesn't have any body odor," says Jasmina Aganovic, an MIT grad and general manager of AOBiome's new line of consumer products, Mother Dirt. "A lot of people think we need all these hygiene routines to be clean or to be healthy, but we're starting to see that's certainly not the case."

That's the idea behind Mother Dirt, which launched last month and includes a probiotic body mist, a cleanser and a shampoo. "The core technology is built around this bacteria that we used to have on our skin a long time ago, but we've wiped it out with a lot of modern hygiene habits," Aganovic explains. "This bacteria is actually a keystone species for the skin; it has a huge impact on all the other microorganisms that exist on your skin. The fact that we've been wiping it out has created more of an opportunity for the 'bad guys' to take over."

Those "bad guys," she says, result in skin conditions ranging from acne to psoriasis. "Interestingly enough, all these skin issues are only present in very developed countries." Mother Dirt aims to reintroduce those healthy bacteria to the skin's ecosystem, where they consume sweat, resulting, Aganovic says, in clearer, healthier skin and, as Whitlock's example suggests, less body odor.

"People think you need to use deodorant to not have body odor, and that's not true," Aganovic says. "Body odor is more of a modern challenge."

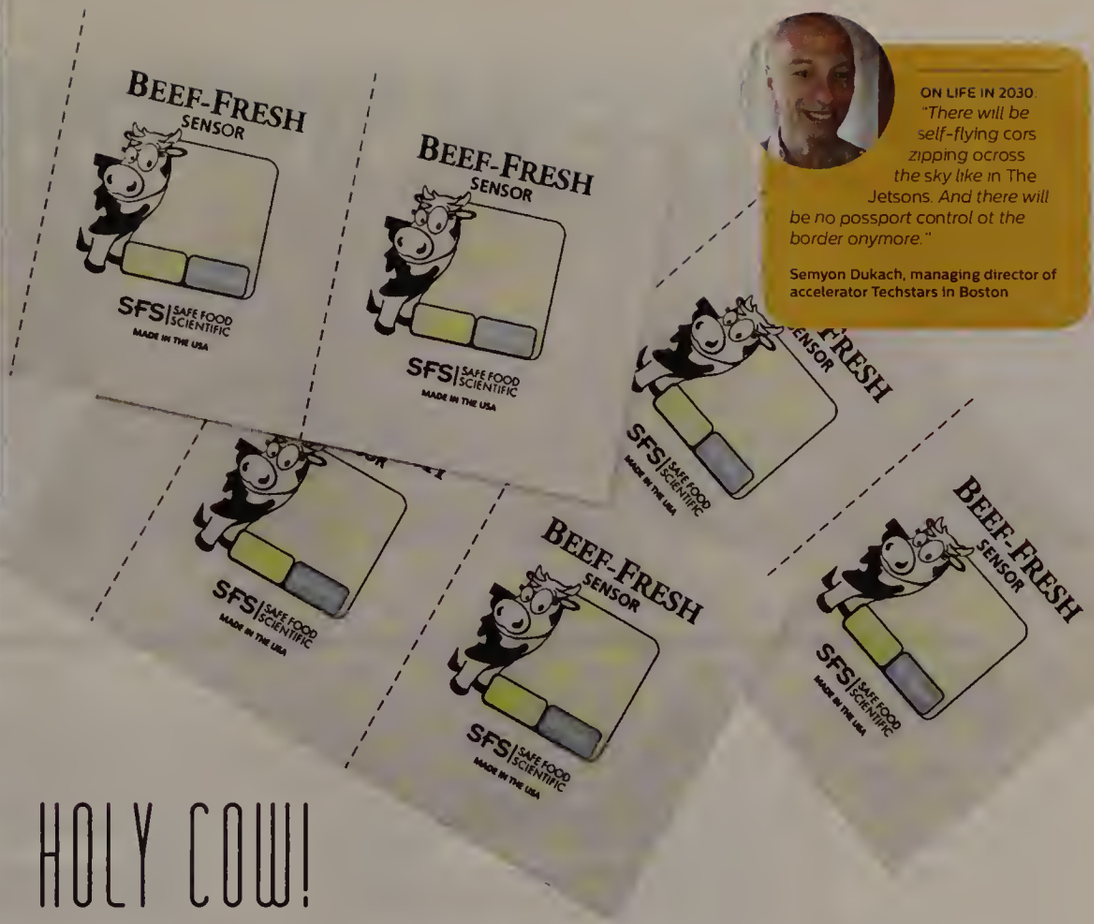
For the record, Aganovic and many of her AOBiome colleagues don't subscribe to the Mother Dirt regimen as stringently as Whitlock does (she still uses deodorant and makeup). But, she marvels, "I don't have to use a moisturizer anymore. It's cool to see your skin change that way."

As for the challenge of selling a skin care product with "dirt" in its name? "We want to start a discussion about rethinking clean. We wanted a name that would challenge people, but could also turn into a rallying cry." / Alexandra Cavallo

WASTE NOT

The next time someone tells you to "Eat shit," it might actually be your doctor. »

That's because Boston is an epicenter for a cringe-inducing yet potentially breakthrough treatment: FMT, or fecal microbiota transplant. Simply put, it's transferring the stool of one person into another to treat illness or infection. Dr. Alan Moss, an associate professor of medicine at Harvard Medical School and a gastroenterologist at Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center, did the first clinical trial of FMT for use on patients with Crohn's disease; his second clinical trial just got underway. So what exactly led him to think putting one person's excrement into another was a good idea? Its astonishing success rate at treating a poten-



CHEESE WHIZ

Benjamin Wolfe is looking to break the mold—and bacteria and algae and yeast. "We're the NSA of microbes," says the Tufts professor. "We're tapping into the communication networks to understand what they're saying to each other and how we might be able to use that communication to control them."

After completing his dissertation studying fungi (including "those Super Mario Bros.' mushrooms"), Wolfe joined a project led by Harvard researcher Rachel Dutton, surveying more than 200 types of cheeses from around the world, plus salami, kimchee, kombucha and other fermented goods. So why cheese? It's a simple and accessible way to study the ecology and evolution of microbes: "You don't have to get in a submarine or inside someone's intestines in order to study it."

He's hoping his research will help achieve a better understanding of infectious diseases. But Wolfe's work also helps refine the taste and appearance of cheesemongers' products, sent to Wolfe's lab from Vermont, California and the UK. (And locals can tap his expertise at select Formaggio Kitchen tastings.)

Wolfe says his research has led him to a finer appreciation of the cheesemaking craft, explaining, "People have a very simple view of cheese going from liquid milk to a solid mass that's then suddenly delicious." And his fondness goes beyond the lab—though his homemade attempt, the South End Tomme, took a churn for the worse and proved too bitter compared to his standby, Camembert. "I'm a bloomy rind guy," he says. "They tend to be very soft and creamy and fairly low-complexity in their flavor profile, but can have some really delicious funk in there that the microbes are providing as they slowly rot the cheese." Yum. / Soroh Hogmon

HOLY COW!

Put the smell test on the back burner. Safe Food Scientific Inc. has invented a more scientific way to figure out if the beef in your fridge is safe to eat. After more than three years of research and development, the Lexington-based biotech firm has launched Beef-Fresh Sensors, featuring a liquid biosensor that measures bacterial contamination levels.

"As food supply lines extend farther across the globe, the vulnerabilities inherent in the system become even more pronounced," says Donald McAlister, SFS's chief executive officer. "You can quite literally see recalls and reports of adulterated food every day." According to the CDC, food-borne bacteria cause an estimated 48 million illnesses, 128,000 hospitalizations and 3,000 deaths each year in the U.S. SFS hopes to put a dent in those numbers with its sensor. Here's how it works: As protein is consumed by bacteria, it emits a specific type of gas. The sensor detects this gas and alerts you when the levels get too high by changing color from yellow to blue. Simply slide a single-use sensor into an airtight container with the raw meat and look before you cook.

One catch: It's not a one-sensor-fits-all scenario. Bacteria growth is affected by the type of proteins in the food, so SFS will be releasing sensors for pork, poultry, lamb and fish in the coming months, with deli meat not far behind. Consider them a lab in a tab. / Cheryl Fenton tially fatal imbalance of a bacterium called Clostridium difficile. C. diff is an exceedingly common problem for individuals who have been treated aggressively with antibiotics, which can upset the natural flora of the digestive tract. Doctors have long struggled to treat it, and it turns out that FMT is an effective cure in 90 percent of cases. "The FDA said it would turn a blind eye on treating C. diff with FMT," Moss says, "but now we're looking into its use in treating Crohn's disease, colitis and certain forms of obesity. Hence the clinical trial, to determine if it's A) safe and B) effective." So far, two published trials—one in Canada and one in Europe—have had opposing results, but interest in the scientific community remains keen. "There are two hypotheses at work here," Moss explains. "One is that you need a diverse mix of bacteria, and one is that you need bacteria that produce certain proteins."

So how, exactly, is FMT carried out? "It can be done three ways: through a spray administered like a colonoscopy, through a nasogastric tube or in capsule form," Moss says. Here too, Greater Boston is leading the way. OpenBiome is a Medford-based nonprofit that began producing freeze-dried stool capsules three years ago, and two local companies, Cambridge's Seres Therapeutics and Boston's Vedanta Biosciences, are developing capsules for commercial use. The squeamish might not want to contemplate the production process, but essentially, healthy donors are identified by a rigorous screening process (less than 10 percent meet the criteria) and paid for what the rest of us flush down the toilet. "It remains to be seen whether it will work on anything other than C. diff," Moss says. "But there certainly seems to be some promise, and it's possible that FMT could help people with really difficult chronic diseases." / Jonathan Soroff

GARDEN VARIETY

Forget farm-to-table—the newest push for local produce is hitting even closer to home, thanks to a Grove aquaponic ecosystem that takes root right in your kitchen. Complete with an aquarium and sites for growing fruits, vegetables and herbs that all work together to nourish one another, the self-sustaining bookcase-sized gardens are meant to be "a slice of nature in your home," explains Grove Labs cofounder Gabe Blanchet. The first prototype filled a windowsill in the MIT frat room he shared with cofounder Jamie Byron; now 50 Groves are being tested by early adopters, with an official launch planned for the fall. Expect more customization capabilities, Blanchet says, adding that while the website notes a $2,000-$5,000 price range, discussions are ongoing about monthly rental options to make the product more accessible.

Not the green-thumbed type? There's an app for that. Grove OS combines social networking and reminders about watering to ensure even novice gardeners can reap a harvest. But don't think you won't get your hands dirty. "We don't want to tell our customers that it's a total hands-off experience because the magic is that it's hands on, and you will come out of this knowing how to garden and grow food," Blanchet says. "I think one of the biggest impacts we can have as a company is to inspire people to not just consume mindlessly, and to be much more conscious of what they're eating and where it's from." / Meghan Kavanaugh

"The plants love the nitrate—that's one of their biggest macronutrient building blocks—so they pull that out of the water. ... You're able to grow taller fusion crops like cherry tomatoes or peppers or cucumbers or peas, and you're also able to grow a ton of different varieties of lettuce greens and leafy greens."

"We provide an organic fish food to our customers that has a great blend of micro- and macronutrients for both the fish and their waste, which feeds the plants. You feed the fish, and the fish waste has ammonia and other nutrients, and then the bacteria convert that ammonia to nitrate."

"You're able to grow culinary herbs: your sage, rosemary, thyme, oregano, basil, chamomile."

"There's a circulatory system throughout a Grove, which carries nutrient-rich water to the plants and clean water back to the aquarium."

"You just have to plug it into the wall to run the fish [tank] and LED lights."

RESIDENT STARTUPS

Adored: A Bluetooth-enabled app that earns customers perks at places like Smuttynose Brewing and Gunstock Mountain Resort

Chef Nightly: An app that procures a personalized meal from a local restaurant, plus delivery and gratuity, for a cool $12

Drafted: A service that lets friends recommend friends for jobs at spots like Rue La La—and pocket up to $15K if they land the gig

BOLT

This downtown venture capital fund invests in hardware startups like Pavlok—a wearable device that helps break bad habits—which recently won a trip to Richard Branson's private island for a workshop with the Virgin Group founder.

RESIDENT STARTUPS

HelmetHub: Kiosks near bikeshares that stock rentable helmets, which are thankfully sanitized between uses

Kuvée: A Wi-Fi-connected wine dispenser that serves a single glass at a time to preserve the remaining vino

Meural: A framed matte LCD display that rotates images of fine art and professional photos

Omni: An app that digitally catalogs personal items in storage, which can be retrieved with a push of a button

COMMONWEALTH KITCHEN

This Dorchester program's portfolio runs from food trucks to wholesalers and retailers; many of its graduates, including Clover Food Lab and BATCH Ice Cream, are already familiar faces throughout town.

RESIDENT STARTUPS

Al FreshCo: Prepped meal kits that use locally grown produce and include door-to-door service

Miam Miam Macaronerie: A forthcoming South Boston storefront that currently offers free delivery of its French treats to parts of Boston proper

Minus the Moo: Lactose-free ice cream that skips harmful ingredients while using real dairy

GREENTOWN LABS

Clean-technology entrepreneurs work on everything from robotic sailboats to nuclear bomb detection in this 33,000-square-foot Somerville HQ.

RESIDENT STARTUPS

Accion Systems: New tech that offers a cheaper way of launching satellites into space

Bevi: An upgraded office water cooler that filters flavored sparkling beverages

Loci Controls: A new technology that harvests energy from landfills' methane gas while making the world a little less smelly

Sistine Solar: Solar panels reimagined as architectural design elements by artists and engineers

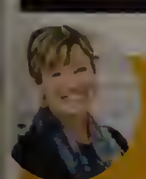
NEXT MILE PROJECT

Founded by socially conscious litigation firm Dhar Law, this Congress Street incubator lends resources to nonprofits dedicated to international development.



RESIDENT STARTUPS

Last Mile Health: An organization that trains villagers in rural Liberian communities, 60 percent of which lack access to key health services

Our Starting Point: An educational resource for new moms and dads hoping to avoid fly-by-the-seat-of-your-pants parenting

Team Heart: An initiative aiming to establish quality cardiac care in Rwanda and beyond

Tulalens: A platform allowing low-income users to crowdsource information and feedback on health care facilities

ON LIFE IN 2030: "Fifty percent of venture capital will go to women founders. (The 2011-13 stat was 2.7 percent. That is not a typo!) And our entire nation of how we interact with physical products will change. We will expect almost everything we use to be customizable with our personal data."

GREY MATTERS

Local researchers and clinicians are exploring truly innovative approaches to treating brain injuries and illnesses. Here are three that might just blow your mind. / Jacqueline Houton

Transcranial LED Therapy

"Sending light into the brain from outside the skull?" says Margaret Naeser, a research professor of neurology at BU School of Medicine and research linguist for the Boston VA. "I thought it was the craziest thing I'd ever heard." But that's exactly what she's doing in her current study with Gulf War veterans, employing a device equipped with LEDs that deliver red and near-infrared light to the scalp and nostrils. She's building on her pilot study published in the Journal of Neurotrauma, which noted improvements in memory and executive function in 11 patients with traumatic brain injury, who also reported better sleep and relief from some PTSD symptoms. "When there's brain damage, you have cells that aren't working properly," Naeser explains. Exposing cells' mitochondria to the red and near-infrared light seems to spur energy production. It also seems to affect nitric oxide diffusion in cells, which in turn increases blood flow. "So we're doing two things: Number one we're improving cellular respiration and functioning, and number two we're increasing blood circulation to the area that damaged cell is located." She hopes this line of inquiry could lead to treatments for dementia and early-stage Alzheimer's as well as traumatic brain injury—but it's very early. "We're the first ones doing this particular program with humans," she notes, adding with a laugh, "Everything else has been with mice."

Neurologic Music Therapy

For Brian Harris, music is medicine. "There's no other stimulus on earth with such global brain activation," says the local neurologic music therapist, who founded neuro-rehab company MedRhythms last year. "What we've found recently through neuroimaging and neuroscience research is that music engages our entire brain, so our emotional centers but also our language centers, motor centers and cognitive centers." Working in homes as well as inpatient and outpatient facilities, MedRhythms aims to harness that power to address the effects of traumatic brain injury, Parkinson's disease, Huntington's disease and stroke, which often robs patients of speech. "We know that people who can't speak can often sing. So we teach people to speak again through what looks like singing. What that's actually doing is recruiting the undamaged parts of the brain to take over language functioning." Similarly, Harris says, rhythm work may help patients with mobility issues. "We met one person who had a stroke, and he was struggling to walk, using a cane and walking very slowly. He was able to walk about 40 feet at a time before he fatigued, and he was getting physical therapy five or six times a week," he recalls. "We had one session, and at the end he was walking 250 feet without a cane at a twice-as-fast tempo."

Deep Brain Stimulation

"One hundred thousand people with Parkinson's now have a deep-brain-stimulation device. And when it's on, they don't tremor. They almost forget that it's in. Our hope would be that we'd have a similar effect, just for different symptoms," says psychiatrist Darin Dougherty, director of the Neurotherapeutics Division at Mass. General Hospital. Awarded a $30 million grant from the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, Dougherty and neurosurgeon Emad Eskandar are working on a first-of-its-kind implantable device meant to monitor and respond to signals across multiple brain structures in real time—and combat symptoms affecting all too many returning soldiers. "It's a closed-loop deep-brain-stimulation device to treat many of the disorders that the veterans are coming home with. That includes PTSD, substance abuse, traumatic brain injury, depression." One year into the five-year project, they've already developed the device, working with Cambridge's Draper Labs. Now comes the hard part: "We're decoding brain signals to know what signal should trigger firing of the device and stimulate another brain area to mitigate the symptoms." It's a tall order: Dougherty notes that while the motor system affected in Parkinson's is "tremendously complicated," it has nothing on affect and cognition. "It's very high risk and high stakes," he says, "which is challenging but also exciting."

MOODS ON DEMAND

If a deep eye-roll is still your reflexive response when someone pays for a latte with an Apple Watch, you might meet the inaugural product from Thync with equal parts indignation and skepticism. But in June, the Boston- and San Francisco-based startup launched an app-driven device that promises users something most wearable tech doesn't offer: control.

"Most wearables are sensors, so they only track what you do, like how many steps you take or your heart rate," explains Dr. Jamie Tyler, one of Thync's cofounders and its chief science officer. "Thync actually allows you to modulate your biology and synchronize your brain activity instead of just sensing it."

Thync's technology builds on existing transcranial direct current stimulation techniques. "We saw all of these developments in neuroscience happening and said, 'Why should this only be available at prescription and therapeutic levels?' " Tyler says. But given the complex science involved, the device itself is surprisingly straightforward. A small triangular module sticks to the brow bone of the wearer, who uses the app to stream waveforms—dubbed "vibes"—via Bluetooth to the device. Users choose either energy vibes to rev up or calm vibes to wind down, sending low-level electrical currents to nerves in the head and, Tyler says, stimulating brain regions that regulate the sympathetic nervous system.

Tyler admits that when it comes to regulating mood, it's the company's approach that's innovative, not the concept. "There are many things people already do to modulate mood: We drink coffee or alcohol, we meditate or exercise, some people take energy supplements or take drugs. But there's a new menu item now."

The wacky thing is: It might work. On a rather unremarkable Tuesday, I trekked to Technology Square to hear Tyler give a short talk about the neuroscience behind stress and sleep disorders—and to try Thync firsthand. With a laundry list of to-do items left to complete that evening (including doing actual laundry), I opted for the energy vibe. I used the handy self-facing camera mode inside the Thync app to check the placement of the device, selected the "Alert" program and pressed play.

After 15 minutes of head-tingling sensations (and looking a bit like a precog), I strode out onto Broadway feeling like a better version of myself. I went on to clean the guest bedroom and kitchen, finish two loads of laundry in record time and masterfully handle a debate with my husband. Possible placebo effects aside, I effectively crushed my Tuesday, a day usually reserved for Hulu binging and socially acceptable amounts of apathy.

Thync has intrigued investors too, raising $13 million in its fall funding round. The first iteration of the product is only supported on iOS devices, but it's anticipated that Android users will be able to join the mind games later this year. As for what's next, Tyler hopes to create a second generation of products that are smaller, more customizable and, perhaps, capable of tackling other emotions.

"I can't think of anything as cool as something that can basically give you a state of bliss or calm on demand," Tyler says. "On a cool factor scale of 1 to 10, this is a 10+." / Austyn Ellese Mayfield

THE ROBOT WILL SEE YOU NOW

You might be meeting these three locally developed robots in a hospital near you. / Matt Martinelli

RP-VITA

Hailed as a major step forward for telemedicine, the RP-VITA is now scooting through hospital hallways thanks to Bedford-based iRobot, which is celebrating its 25th anniversary. This bot can be set up to move on its own or be controlled by a remote operator. Once bedside, RP-VITA can tap into data from the medical machines and link up with a doctor, nurse or pharmacist or even a family member, streamlining communication for care decisions. A nurse or doctor can even use RP-VITA to lead rounds or discharge a patient.

Huggable

Medical pros can sometimes seem intimidating to the sick kids they're trying to treat. That's why doctors at the MIT Media Lab's Personal Robots Group created Huggable, a blue teddy bear bot that helps pediatric patients out of their shells. With a high-pitched voice, light-up eyes and moveable arms, the furry friend can interact with patients and, its creators hope, help relieve their stress and anxiety. Huggable is currently hanging out at Boston Children's Hospital as part of a clinical study on the effect of social robots on patient care.

QC Bot

To cut down on the time wasted lugging supplies or prescriptions through cavernous hospitals, Cambridge's Vecna Technologies created the QC Bot. It looks just like any ordinary pill-supply cabinet, but you might see it roaming the halls on its own. Don't worry—it's locked! The pharmacist or supply manager simply loads up the device, uses the touchscreen to type in a destination, such as a nurse station or patient room, and off it goes with the help of its navigation system.

Digging robots, but want to avoid hospitals altogether? Soft Robotics, a Cambridge-based company, is working on keeping you a bit healthier. Its food-handling grippers can be attached to various robotic systems, replacing human hands in the packaging process for produce such as tomatoes, peppers and strawberries. "They all vary in wetness, size and weight, but this can safely grip it without breaking it," says Carl Vause, CEO of the 2-year-old company. In addition to addressing labor-shortage gaps in packaging plants, the cleanable grippers could help eliminate E. coli and other bacteria introduced by human workers along the conveyor line. "We hope it can be an answer to harvesting as well in the future," Vause says. "Last year in California, 20 percent of strawberries rotted in the fields."

ON LIFE IN 2030: "By 2030 we should realize just how little of the tech-and-innovation celebration actually makes its way to the working class, economically speaking. I have this vain hope that truly massive, crowdfunded investments will manifest—the ultra-Kickstarter, if you will—in order to promote very unique democratizing ideas in the political realm and tech sector. I am cautiously optimistic that this funding mechanism will actually be a major means of combating economic stagnation."

TAKE CHARGE

SOOFA

Recharge your own battery—and plug in your phone while you're at it—by taking a load off at a Soofa Bench. Equipped with two USB ports powered by the sun, the benches were beta-tested around the city last summer, and Soofa's latest expansion doubles its reach with 11 locations in Cambridge, showing off a revamped product with modifications like a slanted solar panel (so users can't use it as a table). There is already international demand, but data strategy lead Isabel Munson says the company's focus is on expanding domestically beyond their Cambridge home, and seven other Soofa states, before charging overseas: "We want to see a Soofa Bench in every city, every neighborhood."

WRIGHTGRID

In the era of "pics or it didn't happen," a low battery warning and no charger in sight can mean certain social death. "We use our phones to do virtually everything today, and yet if we forget to bring our charger with us everywhere we go, it's back to the Stone Age," says Ryan Wright, founder and CEO of the Somerville-based WrightGrid. Its free solar-powered stations found at festivals and college campuses along the East Coast each have 10 lockers with universal charging cords and reset-table codes to keep phones secure as users grab a quick bite to eat or do some shopping. Next up is a focus on municipality placement—stay tuned for news of a local pilot project.

WITRICITY

Watertown based WiTricity is poised to make powering up an afterthought with its magnetic resonance technology, which can provide a charge through surfaces like granite, wood, plastic, glass and even skin. "With WiTricity, consumers will be able to energy 'snack' throughout the day, always staying charged and connected by simply dropping a phone on their desk or in the cup holder of their automobile," CEO Alex Gruzen says. The company has leased its technology to companies like Intel and Toyota for use in cellphones and electric cars, and Gruzen says to expect wireless charging capabilities to be built into new smartphones by the end of this year.

started	Five pilots founded Woburn's Terrafugia, which focuses on hybrid plane/car vehicles. Its first product, Transition, recently completed a prototype stage and can be driven on all roads, but it requires a runway and a licensed pilot for takeoff. The new design for its second-generation flying car, the semi-autonomous TF-X, was just unveiled.	A frustrated Chris Kluckhuhn founded the Plymouth-based Avwatch after serving on one of the Coast Guard's first helicopter rescue teams on 9/11—and failing to rescue anyone. Now his company is bringing jetpacks to market for use by first-responders and businesses.	Cambridge's Fly4Me was created as an offshoot of Camber Vision, which was focusing on providing drone hardware for municipalities and businesses. After meeting with investors, the founders decided to focus on software in April, quickly pivoting to create a platform for on-demand drone service.
	The TF-X won't require a pilot or a runway, and in the air, the operator will only need to enter a destination—but the vehicle will still need to be driven on the ground. Most of the pieces needed for the TF-X already exist, co-founder Alex Min says, citing stabilization systems, unmanned vehicles used in Afghanistan and NASA's sense-and-avoid drone technology.	Avwatch uses two types of jetpacks made by Martin Aircraft Co: a manned jetpack steered by hand controls, which can travel up to 30 miles and transport 250 pounds, and an unmanned jetpack steered by a ground operator that can carry more, travel farther and potentially grab hold of a rescue target with its robotic arms.	Users register online and list their aerial data collection jobs, and the Fly4Me software connects them with certified pilot and drones to complete the task. And this summer, Fly4Me will start a training school for hobbyists and other drone pilots looking to gain certification.
	"You won't use it to get from JP to Cambridge," Min says "But maybe you could commute from Greenwich to Boston or even from a suburb like Sudbury." You will need an open spot to land, Min says, such as Copley Square or the Esplanade	"It's not going to be a mass-market, personal consumption-type device," Kluckhuhn says He envisions jetpacks being used to replace light-lifting, short-haul helicopter missions such as ammunition or food drops and rescues from skyscrapers or ships. He hopes every Coast Guard ship will have one.	It's currently only allowed for specific aerial uses, such as roof inspections by insurance companies, data collection by solar companies or mapping by golf courses. Eventually, cofounder Dmitry Sharshunskiy hopes it could replace courier services for small-item deliveries.
says	It's new legal territory, but Min says his company has input in the review of current FAA rules and is optimistic that the TF-X will be approved when it's ready	It fits into current experimental and unmanned aircraft regulations and will eventually require light-sport aircraft certification.	There's an FAA exemption for aerial-data collection by certified pilots, but Sharshunskiy expects commercial rules to be loosened within the next year
	5 to 7 years	The end of 2016	Available now in beta mode
	The first-generation Transition will cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, but Min hopes a mass-produced TF-X might cost less Min says, "My personal dream is to have it be more affordable"	Around $200,000	Fly4Me is moving to a structured cost system, in which the price will be set based on equipment and length of use

Journalism's New Beat

Two nonprofits are taking a collaborative tack—one internationally, the other hyperlocally.

GroundTruth

It's tough to take journalism seriously these days. NBC eminence Brian Williams was disgraced for making things up; CNN oracle Anderson Cooper is on a continuous road show with Real Housewives ringleader Andy Cohen. No wonder many Americans admit to getting their news from spoofs like The Daily Show. So who can you trust to deliver accurate international news? One local source is blazing a new trail: The GroundTruth Project, a nonprofit operating in partnership with WGBH in Boston that officially launched in April with the publication of "Foreverstan," an in-depth examination of our attempts to extricate ourselves from the longest war in American history. It's the brainchild of Charles Sennott, an award-winning journalist who founded the online outlet GlobalPost and served as the Middle East and European bureau chief for The Boston Globe. "'Groundtruth' is actually a technical term, used for things like calibrating satellites," Sennott explains. "It refers to facts that are checked at a specific location by a person who is actually there. Too many young journalists are writing from cubicles, thousands of miles away from the events they're describing."

Hence GroundTruth's mission, which Sennott defines as "training, empowering and enabling the next generation of correspondents to identify and tell the stories that will impact their generation," To that end, GroundTruth offers a multimedia platform that partners with mainstream media outlets to spread the work of emerging journalists around the world, often pairing young correspondents who can speak to an American audience with other young journalists from the region where the reporting is being done. For example, GroundTruth correspondents were investigating economic disparities in Nigeria in April of last year when the terrorist group Boko Haram kidnapped more than 300 schoolgirls. The GroundTruth correspondents made the connection between the dire situation in Nigeria, where more than half of people between the ages of 15 and 35 are neither employed nor in school, with the tide of violence that gave rise to the rogue group. The story was carried by The New York Times, and other media outlets that have partnered with GroundTruth include NBC News, Public Radio International, and the Atlantic online. "The future of innovation is partnerships," Sennott says simply. "GroundTruth is based on that." / Jonathan Soroff

"When I found out The Nation funds the hardcore investigative stuff through the Nation Institute, a lightbulb went off," says Chris Faraone, veteran muckraker and the founder of the Boston Institute for Nonprofit Journalism (BINJ—pronounced "Binge"—for short). Launching this fall, BINJ started brewing about eight months ago, when Faraone attended a conference in San Francisco. "In California, you can't turn left or right without finding a nonprofit news outlet. And here we are in Boston, the home of independent and alternative journalism, where a lot of this stuff was done for the first time, if we're talking about the Sons of Liberty or about The Boston Phoenix and The Real Paper. This is the place where this is supposed to happen."

The plan is for a highly collaborative project-based model in which BINJ works with existing media outlets as well as freelance journalists assembled into teams using products like Asana and Slack. "We're not starting a new news organization," Faraone explains. "The whole point is to do the kind of work that operations don't have the resources to do but would like to do. I've been going to the local community papers and saying, 'What's on your wish list?'" A project could involve connecting an outlet with an expert on healthy eating and urban farming—topics Faraone found on many wish lists. Other projects might involve data-driven investigative work beyond a partner outlet's bandwidth. "Digging through campaign finance records, looking at bum contracts, Statehouse corruption... the stories that take a lot of legwork, death by a thousand paper cuts, we'll be doing those stories." Others might facilitate content sharing, widening the reach of stories from small papers without a web presence, for instance, or translating content from and to publications like El Planeta.

Whatever the project, one constant is an emphasis on work with emerging journalists. "Let's train the next generation to write about their own city," says Faraone, who's worked closely with Roxbury nonprofit Press Pass TV, which teaches media production to underserved youth and is acting as BINJ's fiscal sponsor while it cements its 501(c)(3) status. Both groups will be on hand on Aug. 13 for a pop-up newsroom in Dudley Square, where BINJ will distribute publications from partners, offer vintage typewriters for impromptu compositions and set up a news desk. "We'll be interviewing people about their experiences, their neighborhoods Where are the leads? What's going on?" Faraone says. "Microcoverage of even a place like Beacon Hill is inadequate. There are issues that people have all across the city. We want to hear what they are. We'll be making media in the process." / Jacqueline Houton

ON LIFE IN 2030: "I've been following the digital personal concierge space (Siri, Echo, Magic, Alice, etc.), and I expect by 2030, these systems will have advanced enough that most of us will be using algorithm-based systems to automate our purchases, manage our calendars, post in social media, pay our bills, make investment decisions and a host of other things. I'm looking forward to having those tools but also curious about the impact of a new layer of artificial intelligence operating in society."

NEW DIMENSION: A star in an upcoming MFA exhibit, this 3-D-printed dress wowed at a Paris fashion show in 2013. It was printed by Stratasys and designed by Iris van Herpen and MIT's Neri Oxman, right.

FUTURISTIC FASHIONS

Boston can sometimes feel like New York's schlubby kid sister, especially when it comes to high fashion. But the Big Apple has nothing on our tech scene, and it's the intersection of these two worlds that caught the interest of Michelle Finamore, Penny Vinik curator of fashion arts at the Museum of Fine Arts.

"Boston is really such a hotbed for all of this technological innovation, and so it was just a really interesting angle," says Finamore, who is working with fellow MFA curators on #techstyle, an exhibit that will be on view in the Henry and Lois Foster Gallery this spring. "[We thought] OK, what is happening here and what is happening abroad, and how can we kind of capture all of that excitement? What we would like to do is present the current state of the industry, how they're using technology in various ways and how it's really transforming fashion and the way designers are designing today. I do feel like this is an area where Boston can differentiate itself from, say, New York, because it's where these worlds really come together."

One of the stars of the show is a garment created by MIT Media Lab artist, architect and professor Neri Oxman in collaboration with Dutch designer Iris van Herpen and 3-D-printed by Stratasys. The skirt and cape debuted at Paris Fashion Week and served as an inspiration for the exhibit. "I was on the committee for the Maud Morgan prize, and Neri was one of the people I nominated," Finamore says. "We visited her and we learned a bit more about what she was doing at the MIT Media Lab, and it was really fascinating. ... It started us down this road of thinking about what's happening not only in Boston, but more abroad."

The exhibit will feature a range of talents culled from Greater Boston—like Descience, Ministry of Supply and Nervous System—and from across the globe. "We have [the exhibit] divided into two different sections, one that is on production, how these new technologies have affected the way garments are actually made and produced and manufactured, and the other side is on performance," she says. "That's going to be about clothing that interacts with your body in really interesting ways." Some such designs include a solar-paneled dress that can charge cellphones and a newly commissioned work from Lauren Bowker, a designer who's previously created a sort of "mood hat" that changes colors based upon brain activity.

Finamore says they also plan on presenting a number of events leading up the exhibit's opening, including Fashion 4WRD, a Sept. 17 fashion and tech panel with the MIT Enterprise Forum. "It will be a whole year of activity that's going to focus on how Boston is a very innovative and exciting place to be." / Alexandra Cavallo

ON LIFE IN 2030: "TV as we know it will be dead... You'll only tap into apps—Snapchat, HBO, YouTube, HGTV, Tinder—to get what you want, when you want it, from social interaction to laughs, suspense, sex or drama."

LAZY APPS

In Pixar's 2008 dystopian imagining of the future, WALL-E, technology has evolved to the point where humans no longer have to do a single thing for themselves. Obese and bloated, they float from place to place on hover-chairs, pushing buttons to have their whims met. Seven years on, humanity has not yet reached that level of tech-enabled lethargy—but we're getting closer. We rounded up four local apps designed for the lazy humanoid in all of us. / Alexandra Cavallo

TOO LAZY TO PLAN YOUR OWN NIGHT OUT? DOWNLOAD THRSDAY.
Launched by Harvard Business School grads in April, Thrsday invites users to pick a Thursday evening for a big night out, enter the number of people in the group and indicate the amount of money they're willing to drop. A "personal concierge" does the rest, planning an evening of entertainment commensurate with the users' budget. All a would-be party animal has to do is press a couple of buttons (and have a couple of friends). Ideal for the lazy social butterfly. thrsday.com.

TOO LAZY TO GET YOUR ASS TO THE BAR IN TIME TO GET A SEAT FOR THE GAME? DOWNLOAD SNAGASTOOL.
Created by two Suffolk grads and featured on Shark Tank, SnagaStool is basically OpenTable, but for boozers. A user can log in and reserve a stool at a participating bar, then show up and slide in past—surely disgruntled—fellow patrons at their designated time. Ideal for the lazy bro. snagastool.com.

TOO LAZY TO READ LIKE A NORMAL PERSON? DOWNLOAD SPRITZ.
This speed-reading app helmed by an MIT grad says a practiced user can read up to 1,000 words a minute, a rate that equates to, say, putting away War and Peace in roughly nine hours. The app flashes one word at a time across your screen at an accelerated pace, allowing users to read without even moving their eyes. Ideal for the lazy academic spritzinc.com.

TOO LAZY TO DO ANYTHING FOR YOURSELF? DOWNLOAD PINCH.
Unveiled at Boston TechJam, this Jersey-based but Boston-launched app allows users to post a request for literally anything—an iced coffee, a late-night booze delivery—and set a price they deem appropriate for that service. Craving a burrito but don't feel like braving the rabid Chipotle lunch rush? Maybe it's worth 20 bucks to you. A user near a Chipotle (or not) can accept your Pinch offer and deliver that 'rito right to your lazy face, in exchange for a crisp Jackson. Ideal for the lazy everyman. pinchfavor.com.

Porch Party

Sounds from the stoop.

IF THE LOUNGE CHAIR'S a rockin', do come a knockin' at the Lawn on D, which is welcoming a bevy of local musicians for PorchfestFEST. The all-day party takes cues from Somerville and JP, hosts to annual community music fests that have people offering up their porches as makeshift stages for local musicians. The Lawn on D's festriffs on the same idea: An eclectic bill of Boston artists—ranging from rock to jazz to folk and more—will gather for a day of free music, open to whoever wanders by. Expect three stages designed to resemble porches, along with ongoing art installations, food trucks, beer and an after-dark dance party—so BYORocking chair on Aug. 8 to the Lawn on D. Alexandra Cavallo

COITUS HUMOROUS

Contrary to what Hollywood and the porn industry would have us believe, sex isn't always, well, all that sexy. Sometimes sex is awkward as hell—all weird noises and body parts that don't seem to fit where they should. Awkward Sex... and the City is a celebration of real-world sex, the kind that doesn't come with a seductive soundtrack and professional lighting. The show features a host of talented female New York comedians and storytellers baring all (metaphorically) onstage as they recall their most uncomfortable, hilarious and downright odd sexual experiences. Expect a one-night stand you won't have any regrets about on Aug. 6, when the show drops by Oberon to sex—and crack—you up. / Alexandra Cavallo

LONELY HEARTS CLUB

Love hurts in Belgian director Fabrice Du Welz's Alléluia, a film about disturbing obsession, gruesome violence and toxic love. Winner of Fantastic Fest 2014 awards for Best Picture, Director, Actress and Actor, Alléluia rattles audiences with the story of Michel, a swindler who seduces and robs lonely women, and smitten single mother Gloria, who becomes his devoted accomplice. Having met their match in each other, their seductive crimes turn deadly, spurred by intense jealousy and psychotic devotion. Watch the body count pile up when Alléluia premieres at the Brattle Theatre on Aug. 7. / Amanda Saunders

Amy ★★★1/2 I didn't know much about the late Amy Winehouse's music before watching this heartbreaking documentary from Asif Kapadia, but I was mourning her by the end. Kapadia's last picture was the 2010 doc Senna, about another talent who died too soon, Brazilian F1 driver Ayrton Senna. But it seems that was just the qualifying lap for this devastating portrait of the soulful singer who died from alcohol poisoning nearly four years ago at the age of 27. Given how much of a punch line Winehouse had become because of her public drunkenness (an infamous outdoor music festival in Serbia where she was too intoxicated to sing is shown here to powerful effect), I was one of many who wasn't surprised by her death, but Kapadia has vindicated her tremendously, compiling warts-and-all footage—much of it shot on camcorders and cellphones by some of her closest friends and enablers—that begins when she was a 14-year-old Jewish girl in North London. The first footage we see was shot at a birthday party, where we hear her gorgeous voice. "Life is short," Amy says on camera at one point. Indeed, tragically. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Ant-Man ★★★ With nearly every superhero movie climaxing with gigantic things crashing into other things, it's a tiny thrill to see the climactic sequence of Marvel's latest take place within a little girl's bedroom. Then again, when you're a hero who shrinks to the size of an ant, even a Thomas the Tank Engine toy seems imposing when barreling toward you. But cut to a wider view of the action, as director Peyton Reed does, and the small scale begets big laughs, another welcome wrinkle in the spandex-suit genre. It's doubtful Ant-Man will be as lucrative as Marvel's last big gamble, Guardians of the Galaxy, but it offers a fair amount of modest pleasures, beginning with the cast. Paul Rudd stars as Scott Lang, a small-time thief with a Robin Hood ethos. Recruited by septuagenarian scientist Hank Pym (Michael Douglas, remarkably de-aged during a 1989-set prologue), who supplies him with his suit and tech, Lang is Marvel's first blue-collar hero. He's also granted a refreshingly unexpected sidekick: Michael Peña's ex-con Luis, who almost steals the movie with his hilarious digressions. "Ant-Man will return," promises a tag after a second end-credit scene. Here's hoping they don't make him any bigger. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Dope ★★★ Unlike the dreadful Me and Earl and the Dying Girl, here's a buzzed-about award winner from this year's Sundance Film Festival that deserves its hype. A comic drama from Rick Famuyiwa (director of 2010's Our Family Wedding, which starred this film's producer and narrator, Oscar winner Forest Whitaker), it's a modern spin on Risky Business for the post-hip-hop generation. High school senior Malcolm (newcomer Shameik Moore) is a geek who loves the music and style of what he calls the "golden age of hip-hop," and he dresses the part, colorfully, right up to his high-top fade. He spends his days with best pals Jib (The Grand Budapest Hotel's Tony Revolori) and Diggy (Kiersey Clemons of Amazon's Transparent) as the three tool around the Bottoms, a tough neighborhood in their hometown of Inglewood, California, trying not to get their bikes stolen by gang members. But Malcolm finds trouble all on his own—and possibly love. Funny and charming, Dope is, well, pretty dope. (At Boston Common.)

Infinitely Polar Bear ★★★ Drawing from her experience growing up in Cambridge as the older of two biracial sisters—children of a bipolar Boston Brahmin and his long-suffering African-American wife—writer/director Maya Forbes casts her daughter (novice Imogene Wolodarsky, a natural actress) as 11-year-old Amelia Stuart, her surrogate in this quasi-autobiographical drama. Amelia's wrestling with a world that tells her race matters; so is her mother, Maggie (Zoe Saldana, charming despite limited screen time), who faces difficulty as a black woman trying to find corporate work in Boston during the late '70s. The film centers on Maggie's husband, Cam (Mark Ruffalo delivering great work in a tricky role); the episodic structure Forbes weaves through a handful of seasons serves as an affectionate tribute to the ups and downs of her deceased dad. Amelia and younger sister Faith (Ashley Aufderheide, another natural) do much of the parenting as Cam struggles to fill his role as father while Maggie studies for her MBA in Manhattan—but he emerges as a positive influence. Forbes understands that children are resilient; as she reminds us with her heartfelt family remembrance, it's possible to emerge from painful experiences not only stronger, but also smiling. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Inside Out ★★★1/2 Riley Anderson (voiced by Kaitlyn Dias), the 11-year-old girl at the center of Pixar's 15th animated marvel, has just moved from Minnesota to San Francisco, where her cramped new house is creaky, old and gray. But then, this isn't your typical sunny kids fare. This third feature film from writer/director Pete Docter (Monsters, Inc., Up) is presented from a uniquely creative perspective: inside her head, in a control room known as Headquarters. Staffed by a crew of five emotions, Riley's mind offers a colorful counterpoint to her drab new surroundings. Joy (a chipper Amy Poehler), the leader of the group, is a yellow-hued pixie. Joy has been Riley's dominant emotion, but now that the young girl faces depressing circumstances—living somewhere unfamiliar, starting at a new school with no friends—Sadness (Phyllis Smith), teardrop-shaped and appropriately blue, is becoming more prominent. Rounding out the emotions are Anger (Lewis Black), Fear (Bill Hader) and Disgust (Mindy Kaling). Docter, one of Pixar's founding members (a cohort known within the company as the "Brain Trust"), makes his diagnosis clear: Sometimes, it takes a touch of sadness to experience and appreciate real joy. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Irrational Man ★★ Cinematographer Darius Khondji, shooting his fifth Woody Allen film, their third in a widescreen format, beautifully captures Rhode Island and Salve Regina University (standing in for the fictional Braylin College), which is a nice way of saying that the movie isn't very good. Allen's latest—his 45th—is a third-rate rehash of his 1989 masterpiece, Crimes and Misdemeanors, a chilling ode to Dostoyevsky that he'd already recycled in Match Point and Cassandra's Dream, both better pictures than this. It also features Allen's umpteenth May-September romance, with Jill Pollard (Emma Stone, appearing in her second Allen film), a student taking an "ethical strategies" class who falls for her teacher, Abe Lucas (Joaquin Phoenix), a rock-star philosopher who has everyone at Braylin talking. Why remains unclear, as this is Phoenix at his most laid-back. Which isn't to say he's bad; both Phoenix and Stone are fully committed—but to a script that feels like a first draft, one that saddles them with voiceover duties requiring them to redundantly narrate the action we're watching. The film's redundant enough. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Jurassic World ★★ The original Jurassic Park was directed by Steven Spielberg. This third sequel is directed by its visual effects. Naturally, the film's a runaway success. It's also unnecessary—when it's not busy being incredibly stupid. But if you like dinosaurs? Hoo-boy, is this the film for you! Remember Jeff Goldblum's Ian Malcolm? He's not in this. No, there's a new "rock star" in town: Chris Pratt's Owen Grady. He's some kind of Raptor Whisperer. Why? Why not. He's also a one-dimensional "type," like everyone else here. The movie's in such a rush that Bryce Dallas Howard's uptight Claire Dearing doesn't have time to remove her high heels, even when running from a Tyrannosaurus Rex. Oh, the poor, old-fashioned, sponsor-free T-Rex. She might as well be extinct, compared to the new genetic hybrid dubbed "Verizon Wireless presents the Indominus Rex." Alas, not a single sequence matches the sheer white-knuckle terror of the T-Rex attack in the original. But then, Spielberg is known for his peerless action sequences, while this picture's hired hand, Colin Trevorrow, had only made one small-budget indie before being handed the keys to the theme park. His work's competent. Verizon should sponsor his next blockbuster. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Mad Max: Fury Road ★★★1/2 Max Rockatansky returns, madder than ever, but more hardened. He's a changed man, played by Tom Hardy, filling the boots previously worn by Mel Gibson in filmmaker George Miller's first three Mad Max pictures. In hindsight, the climactic 14-minute chase sequence in 1982's The Road Warrior served as a test run for Mad Max: Fury Road, which the 70-year-old Miller has distilled into a single two-hour chase. This is pure cinema, and it shames the work of directors half Miller's age. When Max is captured by brutal warlord Immortan Joe (Hugh Keays-Byrne), he becomes a "blood bag" for Nux (Nicholas Hoult), a cancer-ridden "War Boy" who requires transfusions. Meanwhile, Imperator Furiosa (Charlize Theron), one of Joe's lieutenants, has secretly liberated his five wives in her War Rig. A small army of Joe's War Boys gives pursuit, and Max, chained to the front of Nux's hot rod, is along for the ride. Vehicular mayhem ensues and Max escapes, teaming up with Furiosa, his fate now bound to hers. As the armies of more warlords converge, the earlier films' battles for oil and gas are replaced by a fight for something more precious: human life. A masterpiece of motion. (At Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Magic Mike XXL ★★1/2 Steven Soderbergh's Magic Mike surprised by being much more than expected. Sure, it was a peek into the world of male strippers, but it delved deeper, examining the struggles of a post-recession society. It was one of 2012's best films. This sequel is the movie people thought the first one would be. Gone is Matthew McConaughey's emcee, Dallas, along with any sense of a story. Also missing is the guiding hand of Soderbergh, who's retired from directing films (although he's remarkably busy—and reportedly happier—directing television). But even though he's handed the reins of this film to his longtime assistant director, Gregory Jacobs, he remains the movie's cinematographer and editor, so it's still enjoyable to watch—perhaps especially if you're a woman, the half of the species that this picture celebrates. Mind you, there's still plenty of beefcake on display, from Channing Tatum's titular character to Joe Manganiello's Big Dick Richie, who features in the film's one great scene, set inside a convenience store. But it's the ladies who are treated as "queens," as they're affectionately called by the Kings of Tampa's new emcee, Rome (Jada Pinkett Smith), one of Mike's old flames the boys pick up on this road trip to their farewell performance. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Christopher McQuarrie's spy film focusing on the exploits of Hunt and his team, the Impossible Missions Force, is that he doesn't. In this fifth installment of a 19-year-old series that keeps getting better with age, Ethan takes at least one in the gut, reminding you that while he may be great at his job, he's even better when things don't go according to plan. None of the exploits of the IMF look easy, and the fact that 53-year-old Cruise is finally starting to show (and ever-so-slightly play) his age only makes his insane physical feats that much more thrilling to watch. The crazy suits him. And it doesn't get much crazier than the sight of Cruise clinging onto the outside of a flying plane, a stunt that has been at the center of this film's marketing campaign. But the biggest surprise? This is just the curtain-raiser, occurring during the first 10 minutes. The movie's plot involves a rogue anti-IMF organization known as the Syndicate, but their mission is foolish. Why deprive audiences of what's become the best action franchise out there? (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Southpaw ★★1/2 Last year, Jake Gyllenhaal delivered a knockout performance in Nightcrawler, which found him dropping 30 pounds, causing his eyes to pop from his gaunt, haunted face. It was a wonderfully wormy performance, and it was snubbed during Oscar season. In director Antoine Fuqua's latest, Gyllenhaal performs literal knockouts, bulking up to portray anger-prone boxer Billy "The Great" Hope, who's been with his wife, Maureen (Rachel McAdams), since they met at an orphanage. Now, they live in luxury, along with their bright young daughter, Leila (newcomer Oona Laurence). Alas, tragedy strikes as Maureen is caught in the crossfire during an altercation between Billy and a showboating boxer (Miguel Gómez). Billy loses everything: his wife, his money, his home—and his daughter, who's taken by family services. But since the movie is structured as Billy's redemption tale, the gifted Laurence is little more than a prop in a rote script that pushes Gyllenhaal's prize performance against the ropes. Fuqua, who brought out the darkness in Denzel Washington when he directed the actor toward an Oscar in Training Day, does the same with Gyllenhaal. Alas, the foundation behind Billy's Light Heavyweight Champ is far more lightweight than heavy. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Terminator Genisys ★ Here's another profit-minded franchise film that, like Jurassic World, is dependent on nostalgic callbacks. It's also a slap in the face to James Cameron's 1984 original, which director Alan Taylor slavishly recreates while simultaneously rewriting it. But what Taylor forgets is that the first Terminator was a doomed love story. Michael Biehn's Kyle Reese was a wounded soul from the future who gave his heart and life to save Linda Hamilton's Sarah Connor as he traveled through time to protect her from Arnold Schwarzenegger's unstoppable killing machine, literally planting the seed that would give the human race a fighting chance at survival. Here, the former governor of California comfortably reprises his iconic role; ironically, he's less robotic than Jai Courtney and Emilia Clarke, who step into the boots of Hamilton and Biehn without displaying any love for the material or each other. What results is an endless game of Groundhog Day, where the future can constantly be reset. Nothing's at stake, since everyone can simply bounce back and forth in time, rewriting history—including turning Arnold's Terminator into a cock-blocking father figure called "Pops." Would that someone could erase this film's existence as easily. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Trainwreck ★★1/2 TV sensation Amy Schumer brings her caustic humor to the big screen in director Judd Apatow's latest, and while she wrote the script, it suffers from most of the same detriments as Apatow's films, which include The 40-Year-Old Virgin and Knocked Up. It's overlong and indulgent, and although it mines laughs from the abhorrent behavior it seems to be celebrating, it ultimately sides with a very conservative view of the world. If you're a viewer of Schumer's sketch-based Comedy Central show, you can imagine that this creative marriage might go sour—and you'd be right. The movie opens in 1993, when Gordon Townsend (Colin Quinn), who's being kicked out by his wife, drills a mantra into his 5- and 9-year-old daughters: "Monogamy isn't realistic." Cut to the present, where Amy (Schumer), the older of the two girls, has embraced her father's teachings, enjoying her uninhibited and commitment-free lifestyle while teasing her younger sister (Brie Larson), who's embraced a traditional marriage. But then, she meets a successful sports doctor (Bill Hader, who's developing a nice post-SNL movie career), and predictable conventionality takes over. No doubt, Schumer's a star, but she's stuck here playing what she typically mocks. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

WHAT I (STILL) GOT

The surviving members of Sublime, the laid-back Long Beach outfit responsible for '90s earworms like "What I Got," fought for the right to perform under that moniker in 2009. They lost. So they started performing as Sublime with Rome, with Rome Ramirez dishing guitar and vocals reminiscent of original frontman Bradley Nowell, who died nearly 20 years ago. Comparable success on the charts has been more elusive, but there's hope in their new release Sirens, the second album under the new name. And though bassist Eric Wilson is now the only founding member remaining, the band continues to perform classics like "Santeria," which they'll surely break out when they bring their ska-punk vibes to the Blue Hills Bank Pavilion on Aug. 7. / Charlie Gill

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

ISLAND HOPPING This summer, Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard aren't Massachusetts' only island destinations, with FLUX.Boston spearheading the Isles Art Initiative in the city. Take the 20-minute ferry ride to Georges Island to catch easy, breezy music powered by a windmill or go adventuring with !ND!V!DUALS Collective's scavenger hunt. More of a landlubber? Boston Sculptors Gallery is hosting 34, featuring work by artists who've each interpreted one of the 34 harbor islands, while Atlantic Wharf Gallery is presenting Islands on the Edge, an exhibit whose drawings, paintings, photography, videos and sculptural installations include Silas Finch's Limulidae, which attaches vintage drawer handles to a horseshoe crab, and Wendy Shapiro's Black Sand Beach No. 3, pictured here. Head to iai2015.greenovateboston.org to check out the full lineup of programming, which floats on through Sept. 26. / Sarah Hagman

BOOKS & POETRY

Edited by Meghan Kavanaugh

MURDER, HE WROTE

The next time Josh Cook encounters a customer scanning the shelves at Porter Square Books, he'll have a book to recommend—his own. Although his poetry and prose have appeared in a number of literary publications, An Exaggerated Murder is the veteran bookseller's first novel. Peppered with allusions to works from "The Purloined Letter" to Ulysses, the tale twists detective-story tropes as it follows private eye Trident "Trike" Augustine and his partners, former FBI agent Max and artist Lola, in their search for missing billionaire Joyce. Break out the magnifying glass and track down Cook at Papercuts J.P. on Aug. 11. / Hannah Landers

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Cocktails on the harbor with a view of the Boston skyline is never a bad idea, but it's even sweeter when it benefits sailing programs for inner-city kids.

The Courageous Sailing Center's 19th annual Make a Mark celebration, held at the boathouse on Pier 4 in the Charlestown Navy Yard, attracted a preppy and good-looking crew that included the likes of salty dog Gregg Nourjian, the effervescent Connie Brown, the incandescent Anja Kola, the intrepid Mary Schwager, yacht dealer Kyle Jachney, soap opera star Ladd Thorne, PR czar George Regan, the hale and hearty Paul Foster, clothier to the rich and famous Alan Rouleau, Back Bay nabob Alec Stern, impish retiree Richard DeAgazio, the blue-eyed Ian McLaughlin and his gorgeous wife, Tori Samuel, the velvet-voiced Suzanne Logan, blond beauty Lauri Fazikas, the irresistible Joanne Bell, flower girl Amy Goldberg, the amazingly named Kim Saltmarsh, the aptly named Caesar Belbel with the flawless Leah Talanian, patrician skipper Peter Creighton and one guest who asked another, "I don't remember much about the Fourth of July. Did I break anything in your house?"

The band did a creditable job with "Sweet Home Alabama," the silent auction table was as long as a football field, and there were numerous opinions about how to make a proper dark and stormy. Meanwhile, the funniest remark came from the woman who said, "My husband loves when I come home tipsy. He knows he's gonna get some."

THEY SAY THE NEON LIGHTS ARE BRIGHT ON CAPE COD

Broadway came to Brewster when Cape Rep Theatre celebrated its 30th season with Summer Starlight, an evening featuring actress Laila Robins. Guests gathered under a tent for a reception and silent auction, accompanied by smooth jazz. The white wine prompted one guest to say, "Much better than the usual plonk you get at these things," while the buffet fueled everyone for the evening ahead.

Present and accounted for: honorary event chairs Heidi Schuetz and her state senator husband, Dan Wolf (a co-founder of Cape Air), Plymouth denizen Rob Kluin, Chatham do-gooder Brad Schiff, conservationists Karen Grey and Sue Chamberlain, the multihyphenate Cheryl Kyle (of Cape Cod, California and Tanzania), smokingly hot gallery owner Domonic Boreffi, board president Mary Ellen Ackerman, silver swan Ellen Mulroney, artistic director Janine Perry, redheaded thespian Alison Weller, Chatham chocolatier Naomi Turner, arts booster Elia Marnik, Orleans cutie Donna Morris, architect extraordinaire Preston Scott Cohen, the disarmingly charming Shreyas Patel, natty naturalist David Willard, uber-philanthropists Bill and Nancy Brotherton, and Brewster hottie Ben deRuyter.

Once everyone was well-lubricated, they were ushered into the theater, where Wolf conducted a live auction that was blessedly brief and yet managed to raise a cool twenty grand. Then it was time for the main event: a performance by Robins and her S.O., the Tony-nominated Robert Cuccioli, doing scenes from Antony and Cleopatra and A Streetcar Named Desire, which brought the house down (and left a few people sobbing).

Yours truly then moderated a talk-back, after which everyone retired to the tent for prosecco and chocolate under the stars. Best line of the night (barring Shakespeare and Tennessee Williams): One guest, chatting with Robins about her role on Showtime CIA nail-biter Homeland, said, "You give me agita...But in a good way." ◆

TEAM PLAYER

THE PATRIOTS' QUEST FOR A FIFTH Super Bowl title began almost immediately after the fourth was won, which means Bill Belichick only had about a month to unwind this summer. But during his vacation on Nantucket, the famously private coach took a break from perfecting his golf game and graciously made time for our photo shoot—even helping us lug camera equipment and offering recommendations for sandwich spots on the island. It's a side of Belichick that might surprise those who've only seen his game face, and one Matt Martinelli gets to know in our cover story. Elsewhere, Noah Davis heads to the Boston HQ of DraftKings for a look at their fight to rule daily fantasy sports, an industry that didn't exist a decade ago but now has billions of dollars in play. Meanwhile, Jonathan Soroff chats with wide receiver Julian Edelman about his game-day routine and teammates' hidden talents, and Ezra Dyer offers his Patriots prognostications for the season ahead. Game on.

HAPPY HOURS

KRISTEN KISH CLOCKS IN FOR HER LATEST TV CHALLENGE.

Out of the Kitchen

Though she says it still makes her nervous, Top Chef winner Kristen Kish is heading back to television. This time, Menton's former chef de cuisine is co-hosting 36 Hours, a six-episode Travel Channel series inspired by the New York Times column of the same name. Joined by co-host Kyle Martino, a former MLS player, she tours Berlin, Istanbul, Barcelona, Nashville, Portland and Boston—where Kish admits she discovered new experiences despite having lived here for nearly 10 years. "My wonderment is truly authentic and every surprise, and even disappointments, with different things will come through," Kish explains. "I hope it's as entertaining and exciting for the viewer to watch as it is for me to live." In advance of the show's Aug. 17 premiere, we asked Kish to dish out a 36-hour slice of her own life. / Meghan Kavanaugh

FRIDAY

3 pm: Pick up my girlfriend from work, stopping at Jugos by Back Bay Station for a fresh juice. It makes me feel healthy alongside my diet of fried chicken fingers and pizza.

4:15 pm: Walk over to the South End, stopping at the Butcher Shop on our way home. Stop at Siena Farms to pick up produce for dinner, choosing whatever hits me at that moment.

I've recently been on a kick of summer squash, peppers and greens.

5:30 pm: Relax while intermittently checking emails for any last-minute trip details. Prep and cook dinner

8 pm: Pack way too many suitcases full of clothes that aren't mine (for filming) and way too many shoes—knowing I will only wear two of them.

9 pm: Catch up on our few television obsessions, check more emails, scroll Instagram, do some social media damage, all while convincing myself I need to go to bed

11 pm: Nightly bedtime routine: Stare at the ceiling hoping to fall asleep, check my alarms a million times

SATURDAY

6 am: Before my eyes are fully opened, my phone is in my hand checking and responding to emails and texts that I missed in the middle of the night. Coffee, coffee, coffee, water, then more coffee. Once the caffeine kicks in, I'm on my computer doing work—working on my book, writing menus, catching up on life after being away the weeks prior. ... Did I pay the electric bill? Or buy toilet paper?

8:30 am: Walk to the gym, work out, walk home.

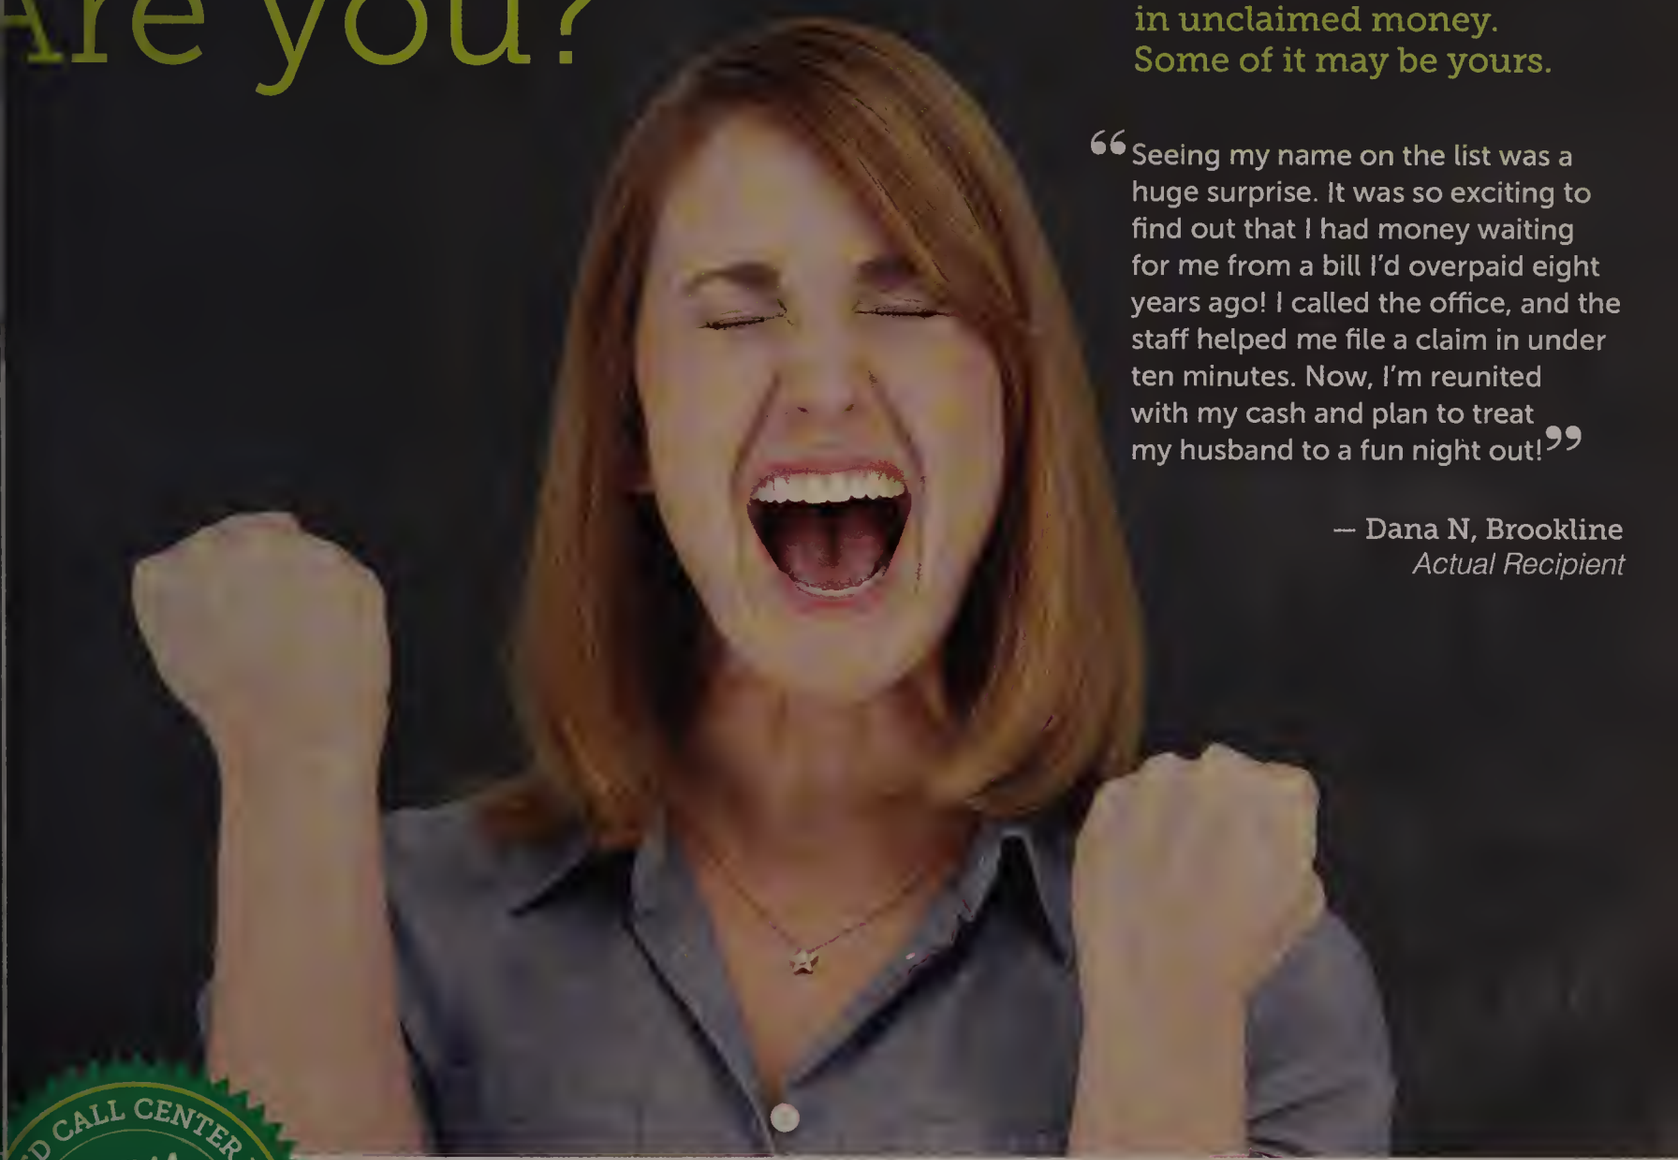
11 am: Shower, check in for my flight, get organized

1 pm: Airport adventures: mainly waiting at Logan and buying so many packs of gum and snacks

3 pm: Air time is great for writing and doing any work that can be done from my computer—it's really the best office

11 pm: Arrive in Berlin. Once I grab dinner, usually room service or somewhere near the hotel, I say hi to Kyle somewhere along the way and meet with our field producer to go over the filming schedule, wardrobe and all the details I need to start the week of filming. Make phone calls to Mom and Dad letting them know I've made it safely

SUNDAY



6 am: Wake up, do the whole get-ready business.

8 am: And the week of filming 36 Hours begins

WHOLE MOTTA LOVE: La Motta's cuisine will reflect Italian American flavors and sensibilities

FAMILY STYLE

AQUITAINE GROUP'S NEW VENTURE HITS CLOSE TO HOME.

La Motta's
1357 Washington St., Boston
(617-338-5300)

AQUITAINE GROUP FOUNDER SETH Woods has heard from a few doubters. Why did he close Union, a place that was still profitable, and that some considered to have the best food and service in his restaurant group? Why is he replacing it with an Italian American joint a block away from his group's Italian trattoria?

Woods and his group have their reasons, including that the forthcoming La Motta's, set to open in September, is vastly different from Cinquecento. But the decision doesn't come down to reason for Woods and his group. It comes down to craving.

"This is like the best meal you had when you went to [visit] the family you know in Italy," Woods says. "We want to do something fresh and exciting that the neighborhood is going to embrace. People come and eat to get their dishes."

La Motta's menu is your grandmother's Italian, according to executive chef de cuisine Justin Winters, who will continue to oversee Cinquecento's kitchen as well as La Motta's. It's dotted with homestyle favorites such as veal parmesan and spaghetti aglio e olio, but Winters hopes that refined techniques will help the familiar items stand out. Calamari is fried alongside thinly sliced lemons, while zucchini fritti uses a seedless version of the veggie that's lightly breaded, fried al dente and served with lemon aioli. Paying homage to some red sauce staples, meatball varieties will include classic beef, lamb and spicy pork with veal, while Bronx-style thin-crust pizzas will be cooked in a triple-deck rotating oven. Likewise, the wine, beer and cocktail selections are expected to hew to Italian classics, like a Negroni. Dessert lovers can indulge in cannolis, fried dough with powdered sugar, housemade spumoni and Italian ice.

"It brings you back to when you were a child and what made you feel at home," Winters says. "There are some things that you wouldn't find back then, but there's a lot of things you would."

La Motta's layout has changed a lot from its Union days. The entrance has been moved to the center of the space, opening to a 12-seat bar, which is now in the middle of the restaurant. There's enough room at the rough-sawn oak tables to fit 70 diners, and the rear wall has been removed, allowing for a 30-seat, three-season raised patio in the back of the restaurant. With lights and a roof that covers nearly 80 percent of the patio, Woods hopes that the outside space will provide an advantage in the cutthroat summer months.

"The waterfront is taking so much business. Who doesn't want to eat by the water?" Woods says. "But having a patio gives us something to help stay people's favorite place [year-round]."

BLUE RENEWED

AFTER 10 YEARS IN BUSINESS, EVEN a favorite neighborhood restaurant can use a little—or a lot—of freshening up. In Needham Heights, Blue on Highland recently reopened after a major makeover to both the aesthetics and the menu. The Eames-inspired bar is now the focus of the dining room, complete with repurposed barstools from the 1940s that were originally intended for submarines. Also of note are six new high-walled booths conducive to a more intimate dining experience.

As for the modern American menu, it now features dinner options such as a blue crab cocktail with housemade cocktail sauce and a Highlander burger topped with Vermont cheddar, slow-braised short rib, crispy onion strings and a roasted garlic Worcestershire demi-glace. Lunch includes treats such as shrimp tacos with a lime-dressed slaw and chipotle sauce, short-rib grilled cheese on Texas toast and a hot-buttered lobster roll on brioche.

RAISING THE BAR: Blue on Highland has a sleek new look

FILL UP ON PANTRY...

FOR THOSE WHO PREFER A HOME-COOKED DINNER without the chores of shopping and chopping, Pantry has opened its doors in Brookline's Washington Square. The shop offers a rotating roster of "recipe kits" complete with all the preportioned ingredients (locally sourced when possible) you'll need to prepare dinner for, say, a date with that special someone you're finally inviting to your apartment. Early examples of seduction suppers are shepherd's pie with quinoa crust and sweet potato flautas with radish and jicama salad. ... In Hyde Park, Antonio's Bacaro, originally slated to open in May, is still on track, albeit a slower track. The owners, who run the popular Sophia's Grotto in Roslindale, tell us to expect a fall opening. ... Finally, why do so many new and upcoming restaurant names sound like mutual funds or corporations? Republic. Waypoint. Committee. Maybe a Chinese restaurant could be named Hunan Resources. Or maybe we can just appreciate that one of the worst-named restaurants in the country recently opened in Raleigh, North Carolina. It's called Death & Taxes.

Dream Catcher®

Legendary "Toasted" Irish Liqueur

The origins of Dream Catcher, an old Gaelic recipe, started in a historic farm house with a pot still in County Cavan, Ireland.

A farmer was inspired to blend an elixir of the natural flavor of toasted chestnuts and other natural flavors with select Irish Spirits to create the taste of toasted Irish Liqueur.
This wonderful treasure was discovered several years ago and is now coming to the world.

Dream on Ice

Swirl a small amount of Dream Catcher in a whiskey glass with ice. Add an equal part of pure water. Savor the superb taste of toasted chestnuts with select Irish Spirits.

TACO TIME: Chilacates' corn tortillas are big on flavor.

Good Eats: Killa Chila

Chilacates took a long time to get up and running, but the wait was worth it for owner and longtime JP resident Socrates Abreu. At his pint-sized taqueria, which recently opened a few paces from the Stony Brook T station, everything is made from scratch—right down to the corn tortillas (they're small, but big on flavor) and the rojo and verde hot sauces. Enjoy them in a taco such as the al pastor, that killer combination of spit-roasted pork shoulder and smoky fresh pineapple that Chilacates does especially well. / Elizabeth Bomze

DRY'S SPELL

When riesling's bad, she's horrid, but when she's good, she's incomparable. The grape is also a true chameleon, able to excel in a variety of styles depending on the winemaker's preference. What all solid rieslings share, regardless of sugar content, is firm acidity and brilliant fruit expression. These three dry examples are guaranteed to be perfect seafood complements. / Sandy Block

HERMANN J. WIEMER DRY RIESLING, FINGER LAKES, 2014
Sourcing fruit from Seneca Lake, and with the longest track record of riesling excellence in the region, Hermann J. Wiemer fashions a wine that shows just a touch of discernible sugar to soften the edginess of its lively acids. Winemaker Fred Merwarth shapes the abundant notes of lime, peach and Granny Smith apple into a medium-bodied wine. It is naturally suited for milder curries or salads featuring fruit and chicken or pork.
$19, wine-searcher.com

DOMAINE ZIND-HUMBRECHT RIESLING, ALSACE, 2013
From the family estate of French master of wine Olivier Humbrecht, who may well be the finest producer of white wine not only in Alsace but in the world, the grapes for this wine are cultivated biodynamically on limestone soils. The wine's aromas are classic, redolent of tangerine, apple, lemon and green herbs. Ripe and minerally on the palate, the fruit is beautifully balanced by razor-sharp acids and an echo of citrus rind on the finish. It's ideal with raw shellfish.

RAVINES DRY RIESLING, FINGER LAKES, 2013
If you've visited the Finger Lakes region, you know the climate can be harsh and forbidding. Planting vines near the moderating influence of the lake shores is critical. This riesling, made by one of the region's budding stars, Morton Hallgren, has pinpoint acidity and mineral expression, but with a floral, apple blossom–like aroma. It has great intensity with crisp tart fruit to complement its distinctly chalky character. This bone-dry riesling tastes delicious with cold seafood salads.

Beauty Buzz: Sharp Relief

Let's get straight to the point. Sometimes anti-aging creams don't cut it, and you need a little extra oomph to fight wrinkles or diminish scars. Starting Sept. 15, Bella Santé gets into the ring, offering micro-needling at its Boston, Lexington and Wellesley locations. It's a treatment that reads a little like a torture ritual: Twelve 32-gauge needles, ranging in length from 0.5 mm to 1.5 mm, stamp hundreds of "micro-injuries" into your face, neck and chest. A numbing agent is applied to temper the moderate ouch factor, and then a SkinPen-wielding pro glides the device over your skin. The purpose of all those pinpricks? To stimulate elastin and collagen production to build new, stronger tissue.

"Everything with skin rejuvenation calls upon the body's wound-healing response," says Kristen Gilbert of SkinPen manufacturer Bellus Medical, who is training the spa's technicians to perform the treatment. "Micro-needling does it in a way that creates less inflammation, but with great results.... There's no chance of post-inflammatory hyperpigmentation that you find with heat lasers, so it can be used on any skin type."

The treatment takes about an hour; although there's no actual downtime, that day your skin will be puffy and sunburn red, and you can't exercise or wear makeup. While some people see glowing skin after just one visit, the recommendation is three to six treatments (spaced four to six weeks apart). With a price tag of $350 per session, that can add up. But with results that can be effective for up to a year, it might be a jab well done. / Cheryl Fenton

WOMAN ON TOP

In her new Netflix special I'm Gonna Die Alone (And I Feel Fine), Needham-bred comedian Jen Kirkman gets real about everything from her recent divorce, to being 40 and childless, to the pesky little daily annoyances that most of us accept as part of everyday life—and it's funny as hell. We got the prolific comic, a frequent guest on Chelseo Lotely who hosts a long-running podcast and is at work on her second book, to talk shop before she stops in town on Sept. 2 for a stand-up set at the Sinclair. / Alexondro Covollo

SINGULARLY FUNNY: For more from Jen Kirkman head to Improper.com.

YOUR NEW SPECIAL IS PREDOMINANTLY AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL, RIGHT? Most of my material is drawn from my life, even if it's a stupid story. I start the special with this long story about how I saw this guy who was ordering a drink. And when the waitress asked him if he wanted a lemon or a lime, he was like, "Um, whatever the green one is. I don't know." And I was like what the hell is happening? Then the rest of it is very autobiographical, about my family, my divorce, my life, and it's all stand-up. I just wanted to have a really self-deprecating vibe.

DO YOU AGREE WITH THE IDEA THAT YOU HAVE TO BE A LITTLE BIT MISERABLE TO BE GOOD AT COMEDY? Yeah, I think a perfect example is Jerry Seinfeld always saying that he doesn't have any angst and he's perfectly well-adjusted, but he's funny. And I'm like, "Eh, there could be something." And he did this interview on Howard Stern where he was like, "Growing up my father wasn't really around, my parents didn't really pay attention to me, it was just like you're on your own and it was no big deal." And I totally believe that he's not, like, tortured by it, but that is abnormal. ... I think there's definitely something in your brain that goes, "Something's not right here. I want to analyze this thing." I don't know if it's misery, but some kind of discontent.

WHAT DID YOU FIND MORE NERVE-WRACKING: YOUR FIRST TIME DOING STAND-UP OR LOSING YOUR VIRGINITY? Well, this is so funny! Oh, I'm going to say losing my virginity because I was older and the person didn't know I was one. . And I just thought, I don't want him to find out I am one; I don't know why. That might be a lot of pressure on him, and then [there's that] I lied. And then, thirdly, I wonder if he's thinking I must be so good in bed, but I don't really know what I'm doing. And so of course none of that came to fruition. A guy is just happy that any girl will sleep with him, and everything was fine . By the way, you're naked usually when you lose your virginity. At the very least, you are never naked on stage.

YOU CURATE A PLAYLIST FOR ALL OF YOUR LIVE SHOWS. WHAT ARE SOME ARTISTS YOU'RE INTO RIGHT NOW? I really like this punk band called Against Me! that has a transgender singer. They're so good. But I also like to put in anything mellow and cheesy. I'll put "Is That All There Is" by Peggy Lee. I always try to put some David Bowie on it. I really like Jack White. I think that's great coming-in music, and I feel like everyone knows him and likes him, but no one really listens to him. And then, lately RuPaul's "Sissy That Walk" has been fun. I like to come on stage to that, even though I'm not anything like that. I'm not fabulous, I don't have a strut, but I think it's funny.

ANYTHING ELSE YOU WANT TO ADD? Just that my parents live in Massachusetts, as does my whole family, and the virginity question—even though they've seen me do stand-up a million times, and I m 40, and they know all about my life—I still think of them reading it. They're going to be like "Jen's not a virgin?!" [Laughs]

UPGRADE

PATH TO SUCCESS

When Zachary Robinson decided to leave his job to open Short Path Distillery alongside two longtime buddies with whom he ran a Scotch club, he says it "wasn't too far of a leap" from his chemistry career. In fact, the name of the Everett distillery, which the trio opened in June, stems from a chemistry pun. Short path distillation uses pot stills, with no refining column, so there's a short distance between the boiling and condensing containers. "We only use pot stills because they produce a more flavorful, big, bold, robust spirit," Robinson says. As of now, those spirits only include a white rum and a gin, but Short Path plans to soon include a triple sec, an ouzo and a more savory, seasonal gin. But Robinson is particularly proud of Short Path's rum: "We had some Puerto Ricans come in and they said, 'Oh this tastes like pitorro,' which is Puerto Rican moonshine, the white rum they make in their backyard." / Alexandra Cavallo

WEST MEETS EAST

The Good Shufu* by Tracy Slater
Published by G.P. Putnam's Sons, 336 pages, $27

TRACY SLATER NEVER EXPECTED TO SLIP into the role of shufu—Japanese for "housewife." In this new memoir, she recounts how she went from teaching literature at Boston universities and a state prison to teaching business communication to executive MBA candidates in Japan, where her feminist independence, Jewish identity and overall sensibility make her feel all the more foreign. For several years, she contemplates how she fits, or doesn't, in her new world, noting the separate socializing of men and women and the quietness of emotion that seem to characterize the culture. Trips back to Boston remind her of the freedom and variety of choices she values, and her writing makes her doubts about staying in Japan so convincing that readers may well find themselves agreeing.

But it's there that she meets the reliably gentle Toru, one of her students. Love blossoms, though it's secretive and communicated through reciprocally broken English and Japanese. Marriage and a greater sense of belonging follow, and in her 40s, she discovers that caring for Toru's ailing father elicits dormant maternal feelings, which lead them to pursue parenthood through agonizing IVF treatments. Throughout, Slater retains her observant wit, even as Toru's steadfast affection gradually tugs her heart east.

FROM PAGE 193: Toru's own approach to depression and anxiety also soothed me. His attitude diametrically opposed my native family's. For us, depression was considered less a feeling than a dreaded guest whose very existence caused endless hand-wringing, actual arrival brought intense agitation, and occasional loitering spawned an all-out expectation of the end times. ◆

WELL-ROUNDED: Fine art, good eats and tasty brews await in Ohio's second largest city

The Escape Artist / Erica Corsano

HOT IN CLEVELAND

FROM HIGH-TECH ART TO FOODIE HANGOUTS, THE CULTURE IS ON THE RISE.

Whichever end of the political spectrum you sit on, it's easy to see why the Republicans chose Cleveland as their home base for the 2016 Republican National Convention. For the past decade, the former steel town has seen an influx of cash and a boom in new development, including luxury hotels galore. All those elephants need a place to stay.

Swanky as those spots may be, there are more interesting products of the recent renaissance. Consider the Cleveland Museum of Art, home to more than 45,000 works of art, including pieces by Caravaggio, Picasso, Monet and Warhol. But the cool factor here is the impressive interactive technology. The museum's first-floor Gallery One uses 10 different digital interfaces, including the largest multi-touch-screen in the United States, which lets up to 20 visitors at a time explore more than 4,000 works from the CMA's permanent collection. Fall hard for a particular painting? Scan it with your smartphone, and user-friendly app ArtLens will let you learn more, identify other artists you might like and show off all your favorites.

There's more eye candy in store. Cleveland is filled with historical architecture—much of which had never been torn down or renovated due to the city's longtime financial struggles. The silver lining? Many 1930s, '40s and '50s edifices now make unique backdrops for modern foodie destinations. Prosperity Social Club is one such spot. Set in a 1938 ballroom, the hipster hangout serves up comfort food with an ethnic twist. Try their loaded potato pierogi or a kishka sausage sandwich. Then there's Happy Dog, a music venue, dive bar and resto in a space that has been virtually untouched since the 1940s. Created by James Beard Foundation semi-finalist Eric Williams, the hot-dog-and-tater-tot-only menu never gets stale, thanks to the more than 50 topping options. Top their beef dog or surprisingly delicious vegan version with things your mom would have never approved of—think Froot Loops, SpaghettiOs or Andy Capp's Hot Fries—and treat your tots like nachos on speed, piling on bourbon pork 'n' beans, pimento mac 'n' cheese or a sunny-side-up fried egg. For a slightly lighter option, just dip the deep-fried potato goodness into one of thei

Tater Dips. (The top-secret fry sauce and Jamaican jerk mustard mojo are highly recommended.)

You might need a long walk after your dog-and-tot binge. Wander the arcades of the Gateway District, architectural wonders that were among the first indoor malls in America. "The Arcade," once called Cleveland's "Crystal Palace," is now home to the Hyatt Regency Hotel, whose oval interior features ornate balconies, gigantic roof trusses and a gorgeous mix of oak, glass and iron. Less opulent but still sublime are the 5th Street Arcades, which include the Colonial Arcade, constructed in 1898, and the Euclid Arcade, built in 1911. They had lost much of their luster, sitting vacant for years, but a 2012 revamp attracted local businesses and took them back to their glory days as bustling commercial centers.

When it's time to refuel, head to Ohio City, Cleveland's unofficial brewery district. You'll find Great Lakes Brewing Company, the first to open up shop in the area, Market Garden Brewery, which has 14 drafts to pair with the farm-to-table pub grub, and Nano Brew, a one-barrel brew house and test kitchen for experimental beer recipes. Froth aficionados also flock to McNulty's Bier Markt, Ohio's first Belgian beer bar, deemed one of the "Best Beer Bars in North America" by Draft Magazine (four times, no less).

A visit to Cleveland is incomplete without a stop at the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and Museum, where you can peruse clothing, rejection letters, instruments and other paraphernalia from James Brown, Joan Jett, Guns N' Roses and more than 300 other inductees. Now celebrating its 20th year, the seven-floor museum includes interactive stations, four theaters and rotating exhibits like Herb Ritts: The Rock Portraits, featuring stunners of Madonna, Cher, David Bowie, Tina Turner and Elton John. It's on view until Dec. 31—one more good reason to pay a visit before the politicos take over. ◆

HOUSE RULES

MA MAISON PRESERVES FRENCH CLASSICISM ON BEACON HILL.

272 Cambridge St
Boston (617-725-8855)
mamaisonboston.com

PART OF THE STRENGTH OF BOSTON'S dining scene is the capacity of the local chefs to surprise us with fresh interpretations of old tropes. Neo-Colonial cuisine? If it's delicious, why not? Traditional Thai dressed up with Western technique? Yes, please! Yet amid that innovation, classic cuisines still hold their own, and for good reason. It's gratifying to find a hallowed veteran like Jacky Robert, who has been flexing his well-honed French cooking chops in Boston since before many Improper readers were born, in a new location. His latest stop is Ma Maison in Beacon Hill, where he continues to hoe the familiar furrow of everyday French bistro fare.

The 50-seat room, largely unchanged from its prior incarnation as Pierrot Bistrot, oozes quintessential Parisian neighborhood atmosphere: exposed old brick, brass rails, cordovan banquettes, white tablecloths, candles on the tables, sterling tableware mounted decoratively on one wall, big chalkboard specials menu, ceiling fans, Art Nouveau sconces, flowerboxes in the windows. Django and accordion music plays on the stereo, but it all feels sincere, not like some Epcot Center pastiche.

The meal starts with an excellent baguette and good butter. Starters hit familiar comfort notes, as in a carrot-ginger vichyssoise ($7) that takes more color than flavor from its non-traditional accents. A generous slice of Uncle Lucien's country pâté ($8) is a reminder that charcuterie has been around a lot longer than our gastropubs. Some excellent house-smoked salmon ($14) tops a chewy, niblet-laden corn pancake dressed with a bit of crème fraîche and a few capers, simple and fine. Gruyère and Muenster onion soup ($9) benefits from a good beef stock and restraint in the gooey topping. Maine lobster bisque ($10) features deep lobster-body flavor and a generous amount of lobster pieces.

The chicken du jour ($22), a simple roast half-chicken on one visit, boasts lovely, crisp, well-seasoned skin and nestles atop a mound of creamy pommes puree, though its breast meat is dry enough to require the accompanying excellent pan gravy. Braised short ribs bourguignon ($27) is rich, alternately tender and well-browned, and paired with crisp-crusted croquette potato. The hefty sirloin steak frites ($29) gets points for excellent hand-cut fries and a beautiful Béarnaise sauce, though one could wish for a smaller cut of better-quality meat.

Among entrees, the nightly offal-centric specials tend to shine most consistently, as in the smashing bargain that is tripes à la provençale ($14), tender tripe in a rich tomato sauce with the lovely, smoky accent of Spanish paprika, and veal kidneys "à l'ancienne" ($26), reminiscent of sweetbreads cooked a surprising medium-rare, topped with a creamy, vividly tangy, mushroom-rich sauce and served on rice with carrots and asparagus. These again echo the fact that some of our biggest dining trends of the past decade are merely a rediscovery of elements the French have extolled for ages.

Desserts also hit some Gallic high notes. A cheese course (five cuts for $14, two for $6) is served properly from the trolley (with gloves, at the right temperature) accompanied by dried fruits and spiced nuts. Crème brûlée ($8) with blueberries and mousse au chocolat ($8) with whipped cream are both familiar and exemplary. Worth splurging to hit the minimum order of two is the Grand Marnier soufflé ($10) dosed tableside with a pour of crème anglaise: eggy, ethereal, steamy, sweet, delectable.

The wine list offers some occasionally plonky wines by the glass ($10-$18; 17-ounce carafe, $26-$29), including a quaffable Sancerre ($12) and a pretty rough Bordeaux ($10). Better to bring a friend and mine the bottle list for bargains, like 2013 Domaine Bégude ($34), a modest, bracing, light-bodied pinot noir from Languedoc-Roussillon, or the 2011 Chateau Paveil de Luze ($65), a dark, roundly silky cabernet/merlot from Margaux. Aperitifs include standbys like the Americano ($8), a refreshing Campari/sweet vermouth highball, and the dry-vermouth-like Lillet blanc ($8). For afters, the sweet, insistently herbal monastery cordial Green Chartreuse ($12) offers good digestive properties.

If there's an uncharacteristic note in the details that compose this emblematic French-bistro experience, it's the cheeriness of the mostly French-accented waitstaff, who are uniformly more smiling and accommodating than their dour, workmanlike colleagues across the pond. It's also a quieter room than is currently fashionable, enabling actual conversation at the table without shouting, doubtless a boon to its largely older, prosperous-looking Beacon Hill regulars. There's little of the relentless novelty that draws throngs to Boston's current It Places. Instead, Ma Maison merely shows Robert still in fine form after all these years, albeit doing a nostalgia tour featuring his greatest hits rather than offering new material. For those seeking respite from the cacophony of the new, or a lesson in why this classic form continues to endure, it's a welcome oasis. ◆

Q: I HAVE EXTRA PADDING IN MY STOMACH AND LOVE HANDLES. PLEASE TELL ME ABOUT THE NEW FAT FREEZING PROCEDURE I'VE BEEN READING ABOUT.

A: CoolSculpting is a very effective non-invasive body contouring treatment. The procedure freezes unwanted fat, killing off fat cells which are then naturally eliminated from your body. No needles, no surgery, and no downtime. It is safe and effective.

Many of us have problem areas, such as our abdomen, love handles or saddlebags. CoolSculpting uses controlled cooling to target, freeze and kill fat cells; only fat cells are affected. After treatment, the crystallized fat cells are gradually removed from our body by our lymphatic system, resulting in up to a 20 – 25% reduction of the fat in the treated area. Results are visible within six weeks of treatment and the final results are seen after three months.

At SkinHealth, our clients have seen remarkable results with CoolSculpting!

FANTASTIC FOUR* ★
Starring Miles Teller, Michael B. Jordan, Kate Mara, Jamie Bell, Toby Kebbell, Tim Blake Nelson, Owen Judge, Evan Hannemann, Dan Castellaneta and Reg E. Cathey. Written by Jeremy Slater, Simon Kinberg and Josh Trank, based on the Marvel comic by Stan Lee and Jack Kirby Directed by Josh Trank. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Movies / Brett Michel

FOURGETTABLE

THERE'S NOTHING MARVELOUS ABOUT THIS FANTASTIC BORE.

A YOUNG MAN IS GRANTED GREAT POWER, one he can barely control. With the weight of a world resting on his shoulders, he fails...fantastically.

While this could be the setup of the umpteenth superhero movie to replace thinking man's fare in cinemas, it's actually the behind-the-scenes story of a promising filmmaker who came up short in the opportunity of a lifetime.

After the success of his low-budget debut film, 2012's Chronicle—an original superhero story—31-year-old director Josh Trank was tapped by 20th Century Fox to reboot its stagnant Marvel Comics property, Fantastic Four, before the rights reverted back to Marvel.

However, after sitting through 100 minutes of Trank's flattened soufflé, I can't imagine Marvel would want anything to do with the onscreen exploits of the company's celebrated First Family—genius inventor Reed Richards (Mister Fantastic), his wife Sue (the Invisible Woman), her brother Johnny (the Human Torch) and Reed's best friend and college roommate, Ben Grimm (the boulder-skinned Thing). Hell, the advance stink of this film's failure was so strong that the publisher indefinitely cancelled both of its Fantastic Four comic titles—another behind-the-scenes drama more interesting than anything you'll see onscreen.

Setting off a wave of negativity surrounding the film, Trank hired Michael B. Jordan, the talented young black actor who had costarred in Chronicle, to portray Johnny Storm. The controversial move upset change-averse comic fans that were used to 54 years of stories featuring a blond-haired, blue-eyed Human Torch. But Jordan proves an inspired choice, and truth be told, Trank assembled a terrific young cast to fill out the rest of the roles. Sue is played by Kate Mara, from Netflix's House of Cards; Ben is portrayed by Billy Elliot's Jamie Bell; and Trank cast Miles Teller, Jordan's That Awkward Moment costar, as Reed, the paternal leader of the group.

But here's the thing: Reed's not a patriarchal figure in this needlessly modern retelling. In order to adopt The Dark Knight's brooding, ostensibly real-world vibe, Trank and his coscreenwriters—Jeremy Slater and producer Simon Kinberg—threw out Stan Lee and Jack Kirby's colorful origin story. That means there's no rocket ride into space that exposes our heroes to DNA-altering "cosmic rays." Alas, there's probably even less real-world science in this version of the story, which uses the 2004-09 comic, the alternate-reality Ultimate Fantastic Four, as its primary inspiration.

What little entertainment this film offers is from trying to guess what's been changed.

In this telling, there's little room for family, and certainly not marriage, since all of the characters are teenagers. Reed's high school science experiment lands him a scholarship to Prof. Charles Xavier's School for Gifted Youngst...err, Manhattan's government-funded Baxter Foundation, populated by big-brained kids like Sue and overseen by her adoptive dad, Dr. Franklin Storm (Mara's House of Cards costar, Reg E. Cathey). The good doctor has recruited Reed to finish building an interdimensional teleportation device that was initiated by the soon-to-be-evil doctor Victor Von Doom (Toby Kebbell, who showed more humanity as a simian villain in Dawn of the Planet of the Apes). This cardboard baddie (with his cheaper-than-cardboard-looking costume) was initially known as Victor Domashev, an antisocial hacker utilizing "Doom" as his online tag—until Fox lost confidence in Trank, hastily reassembling the cast to reshoot much of the picture.

What little entertainment this film offers is from trying to guess what's been changed from the vision that Trank originally presented to Fox (including three major action sequences that have gone missing). The best clues come from Mara's changing hair colors and styles that go from her natural locks to the worst wigs this side of Saturday Night Live. We might never know who's fully to blame: maybe an inexperienced director, perhaps a meddling studio—and probably both.

The post-production "fixes" are also apparent when the movie inexplicably jumps ahead one year—just as the plot's becoming interesting. After an interdimensional accident gives the quartet its horrifying new abilities (because nothing's ever fun in this film), we never see them learn to harness these powers—or even interact with each other until the less-than-fantastic, choppy, truncated final act. Reed, who's inexplicably been on the run, is captured and convinced to resume work on the device that's done nothing but cause harm.

"They made it ugly," he observes, taking in what's happened to the product of his work with the Fantastic Four. They sure did. ◆

NICKI BLUHM & THE GRAMBLERS
play the Sinclair on Aug. 27

Music / Paul Robicheau

GOLDEN STATE

VINTAGE-STYLED SONGBIRD SURMOUNTS LIFE'S CHALLENGES WITH FAMILY BOND.

As clear as a ray of California sunshine, Nicki Bluhm & the Gramblers evoke the sound and spirit of the group's home-state predecessors from the '70s. Listeners can hear echoes of Little Feat, Buckingham/Nicks-era Fleetwood Mac and, in the earthy, gliding vocals of Bluhm, the heyday of Linda Ronstadt or Emmylou Harris.

"All that music definitely conjures up a golden era for me, just with the really rich vocal harmonies and great tone on guitars," says Bluhm, 35, whose band returns to the Sinclair on Aug. 27. "I didn't live through or experience that, but I have a warm, magical feeling about that time, about that music, about everybody being together in [Laurel] Canyon... There was a lot of collaborating and partying and discovery and support, and I really liked that."

A native of the Bay Area city of Lafayette, Bluhm first distilled musical influences from family: Two older brothers were Deadheads, her father favored country and jazz and her mother loved soul. In the wake of her own vinyl discoveries, Bluhm forged another family connection. She followed San Francisco rockers the Mother Hips, whose singer/multi-instrumentalist Tim Bluhm saw Nicki sing at a party and encouraged her. The two eventually married and became bandmates.

"The unfolding was pretty organic," she says of their relationship, which now extends to songwriting—separately and together—with the Gramblers. "I really appreciate having somebody to go to who I really trust and admire in that way." They formed the band in 2008, and the lineup congealed around drummer Mike Curry, bassist Steve Adams, rhythm guitarist Dave Mulligan and lead guitarist Deren Ney, one of her childhood friends who also contributes to the writing.

Touring with a spouse can be tough, but she adds, "Being in a band with anybody is challenging. It's a very close relationship, and not just physically, that you're all crammed in the bus together and playing together... It's very intimate and requires constant communication, hard work, compassion and kindness."

Similar thoughts surface when Bluhm talks about songwriting, saying that her main intention is to relate to people. "Going through life is really challenging," she says. "[Music] is comforting. I know I always use music in that way.

"It's comforting to listen to a song where the writer is like, 'I get it, I know. Me too.' There's a sense of compassion in that."

If I'm feeling really awful or going through a hard time, it's comforting to listen to a song where the writer is like, 'I get it, I know. Me too.' There's a sense of compassion in that."

Cue "Queen of the Rodeo," one of Bluhm's favorite tracks on her band's latest album, Loved Wild Lost, released in April. "It's a song about perseverance and dedication and not giving up, working really hard to get what you want and not really caring what people think," she says. It includes a line about watering horses, drawn from Bluhm's experience riding and working around stables, but she didn't think the song was autobiographical—at first.

"You just start writing about a character," she says. "I don't really know who it's about. You go through the motions, and a lot of it is subliminal. Sometimes it takes a while to put the pieces together. But whatever comes out of you is part of you."

At the same time, Bluhm and her bandmates took a step beyond themselves on Loved Wild Lost, enlisting Brian Deck (Iron & Wine, Modest Mouse) as the group's first outside producer. "It's a little more refined," Bluhm says of the album's blend of country, folk, rock, blues and gospel, with a dash of strings from San Francisco's Magik*Magik Orchestra. "Brian was great about making us trim the fat."

The Gramblers know how to strip things down. Consider the band's iPhone-filmed Van Sessions on YouTube, recently revived with a take on the album's funky "Mr. Saturday Night" after a rare day back in the van rather than a tour bus.

"You'll have 12 hours driving through the Rocky Mountains," Bluhm says of the scenario behind the series, hatched to kill boredom—before a Hall & Oates cover went viral. "The more you can play music, the better musician you become. I'm glad people liked it, but it was also a really good exercise for us as a band." ◆

HEALTH CARELESS

WHAT YOU DON'T KNOW CAN'T HURT YOU, RIGHT?

I'M PRETTY SURE I HAVE A BROKEN ARM. Three weeks ago I slipped on wet tile in our laundry room, and the resulting fall was neither gentle nor graceful. I basically did an Atomic Elbow off the left turnbuckle, smashing my forearm on the floor and uttering a few choice words for the slobbering dog who dribbled the lethal water slick near his bowl. Initially my arm looked all jacked up, but eventually the bruises and abrasions went away. Now it just hurts. Is it still supposed to hurt three weeks later? I should probably get it looked at. But I'm not going to. Where health care is concerned, I've reached the conclusion that the best thing to do is nothing at all. If Blue Cross offered a plan called Rub Some Dirt on It, I'd sign up for that.

Now, don't get me wrong: If you have a mishap with a nail gun and find yourself with a galvanized spike in your skull, get yourself to the hospital right quick. And if you're a guy who just turned 50, make an appointment with Dr. Jellyfinger. But if you feel fine, don't go looking for trouble, because you'll probably find some. We're all a little bit out of spec somehow. As the saying goes, if you shake the coconut tree, don't be surprised when a monkey falls out and bites you. Was he rabid? Now you have something to test for.

A few months ago, I went in for a physical, my doctor's annual shakedown so that I can get my Propecia refilled and sustain the fantasy that I'm not edging toward a look that I'd call "pale Pitbull." They did a blood test, and of course something was off. "Your bilirubin is a little bit high," she said. "I want you to come back in for more tests." I asked why I should care if Billy Rubin is high, and she said it could mean I have Gilbert's syndrome. I dropped to my knees and began to weep. No! No! Why me!? I'm too young for Gilbert's syndrome! What is Gilbert's syndrome?

She explained that Gilbert's syndrome doesn't really do anything. It's the laziest of syndromes. From what I understand, high bilirubin means you might have Gilbert's syndrome, and Gilbert's syndrome means you have high bilirubin. Either way, we can agree that it's very brave of me to live with such a debilitating condition, assuming that I have it. I still don't know, because I never went back in for the follow-up test. I feel fine. Strong like bull. So let's stop shaking that coconut tree, Doc.

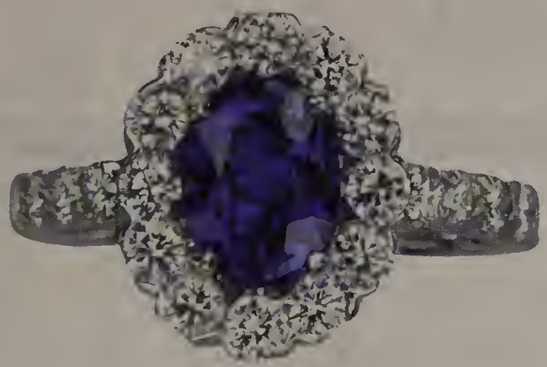
Of course, my less-is-more health care philosophy falls apart when my kids are involved. One recent weekend, I was home solo while Heather was off pursuing her nurse practitioner degree, the completion of which will hopefully mean I never have to see a doctor again. (At least until I'm 50, unless we want to take our relationship to a new level.) During the night, my 3-year-old, Finn, wakes up and complains of a bellyache. I figure he just has to take a giant crap, so in the morning I give him Ibuprofen for the pain and Pedialax to speed up the process. But he's in pretty bad shape, crying and clutching his abdomen, so I take him to the pediatrician.

There, the on-call doctor opines that... he probably has to take a big crap (my kid, not the doctor). But just to be safe, he wants me to bring him to the hospital for an ultrasound. An hour or two later, we're sitting in a dark room while a technician waves the electronic wand across the kid's stomach.

No! No! Why me!? I'm too young for Gilbert's syndrome! What is Gilbert's syndrome?

Four years ago, I was sitting in a similar room with Heather while she had the same procedure. How ironic that the baby in those ultrasounds is now sitting here getting an ultrasound of his own healthy food baby. "See that?" the technician said, pointing to some indecipherable blobs on the screen. "That's a big poop making its way through." Thousands of dollars in high-tech equipment and years of training for skilled medical professionals, all brought to bear on an overly rocklike turd. Which, let's recall, is exactly what I thought the problem was all along.

I haven't yet received the bill for the ultrasound, but odds are that Finn will hold the household title for Most Expensive Bowel Movement. But what was I supposed to do? If the doctor tells you to bring your kid for an ultrasound, you gotta do it. Even if both of you are pretty sure that the solution is just to eat more raisins.



I know, I should be glad nothing truly serious was awry. And I am. But I'd love it if we could go a whole year without testing for ailments real or imagined. I'd applaud that. Softly, though. I don't want to hurt my good arm. ◆

Think that's funny? Send unbiased emails to ezra@improper.com.

THEM'S THE BREAKS: My arm might well be broken, but I'd have to take a doctor to have that verified.

What's the use, if everything just continues to fall apart and there seems no solution to the endless parade of madness, in politics and in people seeming to hate each other? I have insomnia. And when I sleep, it's only nightmares... Well, if it's of any comfort, the world has been going to hell for thousands of years. Let me give you a little story from the stock market that may reassure you. Why the stock market? Because, in my view, markets primarily move because of emotion, fear and greed. And now you're reacting to this fear yourself. Here's a little story that may help you.

I blow off steam in the office every day by walking around and shooting the breeze with various characters. One of them is a man in his mid-40s, philosophical and wise. Markets have been a bit fearful lately, with investors assessing the news that frightens you as well. I asked him: "Are you worried?"

"It's always hard when markets go down," he said. "But here's what I think. I came into the business in 1994, and the Dow Jones Average was 3,000. Then, in 2000 we had the bursting of the Internet bubble. Then 9/11, horrifying. Then, the worst market meltdown since the Great Depression, starting in '08. All this, and we're over 17,000 on the Dow Jones."

He concluded, "You tell me where you'd rather live and invest. Be a long-term optimist on America."

I'm 26 years old and consider myself to be financially responsible. I (mostly) keep to a budget, pay off my credit card in full each month, and the only debt I carry is a manageable student loan payment. I also put 30 percent of my income each month toward a savings account, but I do dip into it occasionally, keeping it from being the true emergency fund I envision. Is this the smartest way to allocate my savings? I wonder if instead of continuing to slowly pad a savings account, I should become more aggressive with student loan repayment, or if I should restart 401(k) contributions that were put on hold when I switched jobs last year. We're not talking a huge amount of money here. Is it better to spread the wealth to all three or make more meaningful contributions to one in particular? Good for you, frugal and smart, no entitlement gene. In my view, restart your 401(k) investments. This is your key savings vehicle, because it can grow tax-deferred and you may get matching funds from your company. This is an important no-brainer, and it should receive the bulk of your savings dollars.

If there are funds left over, I'd split these dollars, half against student loans, and half into your slush fund for emergencies. But your 401(k) plan should come first. Forced savings now will reward you later. And "later" will pop up for all of us, with most people unprepared for it.

I'm in my 40s and divorced. I met a woman, new to our office, who is 18 years younger than me. She's also divorced. Well, long story short, I fell madly for her, and I thought she felt the same way. For four months it was heaven. I performed better at work, my energy was incredible, my appetite too. Two weeks ago she told me the age difference was just too great. And that was that—cold turkey. Over.

Every day my head feels like it's going to explode. It's worse seeing her every day. I email her. I call her. Can't sleep. Help. You have a lot going on. And it's no help to you to say that this drama has played out millions of times over the centuries. It still hurts when it's you. Several things: One of the attractions of your friend, the younger woman, was the way she restored your youth, made you believe you were still 18, when everything is possible and spread out before you. Most men are lost in their 18-year-old dreams, which is one of many reasons why women rule. They are the adults, and it will help you in the future to appreciate this.

You don't, in my view, appreciate how much love is a certain kind of game. Deadly serious, of course, but a game. You cannot wear your heart on your sleeve. You cannot show how much you care, at least not in the beginnings of the dance that is romance. If you push too much, and show neediness often, you're doomed.

The bad news is your lady friend probably cannot be brought back. She needed strength and maturity, not complete honesty. The good news is that there are at least a million kinds of love, and at least 1,000 women you could fall in love with, and perhaps marry. Just bear in mind that in the beginning stages of all this, that it's a game, and there are no rules. ◆

Well, if it's of any comfort, the world has been going to hell for thousands of years.

Soroff On / Julian Edelman

POWER PLAYER

THE PATS STAR FIELDS QUESTIONS ABOUT GRONK'S TWERKING, DREAM ENDORSEMENTS AND PREGAME RITUALS.

PATRIOTS SUPERSTAR WIDE RECEIVER JULIAN Edelman, 29, was born and raised in Redwood City, California, and was the star quarterback at Woodside High School. After playing quarterback at Kent State and the College of San Mateo, he was drafted by the Patriots in 2009. Noted for his versatility, he played both wide receiver and defensive back during the 2011 season and he holds the highest career punt-return average among active players.

JONATHAN SOROFF: The real story behind your nickname "Minitron"?
JULIAN EDELMAN: Well, one of my Boston PD friends, Jimmy Stoddard, claims he coined that. He takes it personally when Tom [Brady] says he gave it to me. As for what I think: It's cool and all, but I'm really known as "The Squirrel."

Patriot who's most likely to become an actor? The cameos by Rob Gronkowski are already in full effect, so we'll probably keep getting the Gronk.

Are you a certified citizen of Gronk Nation? I'm actually on the Supreme High Council of that bad boy.

Do you think pro athletes are idolized to an unhealthy extent? Well, it's a double-edged sword. It's a great thing, because you remember when you were a kid, and you idolized guys. But when you get into that situation, you have to realize everyone's looking at you. You can't always go out and have fun or make a fool of yourself, because you're supposed to set an example. So, to a certain extent, it's fun, but there's another side, where you're still 29 and you're still learning about life. You're not always going to be perfect, and when you're constantly being judged, it can be tough. I'm just trying to learn, too.

So if Bob Kraft told you to jump off a bridge, would you? I'd say, "Is that in my contract?"

NFL city or team you least like to play? Well, playing against Buffalo in the winter isn't a lot of fun because of the weather. They have great fans, but it's kinda crazy.

Favorite stadium, besides Gillette? I'd have to say Chicago. I like playing in New York, too. Chicago's stadium has the old soul, but it's all renovated.

Favorite thing about Pats fans? The passion. I always say that it's not like when you go to Ohio, or Florida, or the South, where they have all the hootin' and hollerin' over the state universities. In Boston, what people love are the professional football, baseball, basketball and hockey teams, and they're not messing around.

Endorsement deal you'd kill for? [Laughs] I gotta be careful with this one. I think it would be kinda cool to do a luxury watch brand. The high-end watches always get tennis or golf players. I think Rolex should have an NFL guy, and I'm willing to put myself forward.

Biggest slob in the locker room? I'm going to say Rob Ninkovich. Sorry, Rob!

Best twerker on the Patriots? [Laughs] That hands down has to go to Gronk. He likes to twerk. You've seen it in the media. A close second would be Chandler Jones. And a close third, under the radar, on the low a really good dancer, is Matthew Slater.

"High-end watches always get tennis or golf players....Rolex should have an NFL guy, and I'm willing to put myself forward."

Post-football plans? In 20 years, I see myself being a human canon ball in a traveling circus.

Thing you're most proud of? [Without hesitation.] Winning the Super Bowl.

Football hero growing up? I had three. I always loved Joe Montana. Jerry Rice was unbelievable. Actually I had four. Prime Time Deion Sanders' number is still in my email address. And I also love Doug Flutie. Undersized quarterback.

Thing you love most about Boston? It's a small town with a lot of neighborhoods. Great restaurants. The foliage is unreal. Going down Commonwealth Avenue whenever—in snow, in summer—is just unbelievably beautiful. Boston's just lively, young and energetic.

Thing you like the least? The traffic. There are only three ways into the city.

Most ridiculous thing you've ever read about yourself? I try not to read that stuff, but I guess something like who I'm supposedly dating. That stuff's funny.

Workout routine in the offseason? Well, I live in Los Angeles, in West Hollywood. I wake up probably at 6 o'clock every morning. I make a smoothie. I drive over to Carson and get prevention training on my knees and strengthening my ankles, all the areas that are vulnerable. That's about an hour. From 9 to 10, I get ready for my workout. At 9:45, I start stretching and rolling out, getting prepped. At 10, we start on-the-field training: plyometrics, speed training—whether it's lateral speed or top speed. That goes on for about 45 minutes. After that, we hit the weight room, where we incorporate strength and explosive training, with Keiser machines, high-intensity metabolic training, until about 11:30 or 12. After that, I usually drive to UCLA or USC and find a quarterback to practice with. Then, at 2 o'clock, I eat some sushi, take a nap, and I'm ready for the day.

Any pregame rituals? I do the same thing every time, but not out of superstition. I get there real early. I hit the hot tub and warm my body up. I go out and do drills. I come in and lay out my uniform. I always pick four pairs of brand-new socks; I don't know why. I go get taped, put on my lowers and go outside and catch some more balls. See the field and how it's playing, if there are any spots. After that, I come in, get ready and throw on some music that relaxes me. Then I go to work.

Sport you watch the most on TV? I love watching golf. It's crazy. I love these new young guys. I loved watching Tiger in his prime. Watching the Masters was my ultimate giddy fanboy experience.

Weirdest fan encounter? Well, it's always pretty weird when you're in a men's room and someone wants to shake your hand right after they used the urinal. I always do the elbow to elbow thing. That's always awkward.

One thing everyone should know about you? Everyone should know that I genuinely love what I do. ◆

WINNING STRATEGY

Why is Bill Belichick smiling these days? It's not just those Super Bowl rings.

BY Matt Martinelli
PHOTOGRAPHED BY Kerry Brett

It's hard to surprise Bill Belichick. He's prepared for the first two minutes of a preseason game. He's prepared for a two-minute drill during an October practice. And he's prepared for the final two minutes of a Super Bowl. But he didn't see a moment in early May coming. And the result was what all those people close to the Patriots coach say is a common sight away from work: A smile. A big smile.

Three months after winning his fourth Super Bowl as coach of the New England Patriots, Belichick rolls up the sleeves of his gray hoodie and scribbles a few notes on a sheet of paper. He's in the back corner of a hotel reception room near Gillette Stadium, and his girlfriend Linda Holliday, executive director of the Bill Belichick Foundation, is introducing him at the podium. Belichick trots to the front of the room to deliver a speech to some of the 18 scholarship winners and nine grant recipients from his foundation, which gave out more than $100,000 in its inaugural year to football and lacrosse players and organizations. He's relaxed, at ease, reminiscing about how football helped his father avoid life as a coal miner, cracking jokes about the winter snow and how "everyone's got me outdressed today." He might as well be a politician making a stump speech in New Hampshire. Then he asks the recipients to speak about how the money helped their work. And that's when it happens.

Aimee Dixon from Fields of Growth stands up and surprises the 63-year-old coach with some news: Her lacrosse organization is about to break ground on the Bill Belichick Multi-Sport Complex in Uganda, made possible by a $10,000 grant. A genuine smile stretches over his entire face, spanning from ear to jowl. It's a bit of a "wow" moment for Belichick, but it only lasts a few seconds. Before he can even enjoy it, he's moved past it, quizzing Dixon about the logistics of her organization.

INSIDE THE LOGO:

Holliday says Belichick's hoodie was considered for the foundation's logo, but she nixed it: "That's just done." They settled on headphones, which are more iconic than you might think: They were part of the cover art for David Halberstam's Belichick biography and NFL Films' Belichick documentary. "You see Bill all the time with headphones on, headphones off," Holliday says. "It's what he does."

"I'm sure that nobody will recognize that name there," Belichick says two months later, relaxing on a bench near the Sankaty Head lighthouse in Nantucket, where he's had a home for decades. "Honored by some place I've never been to, so that's pretty cool."

But the motivation behind Belichick's latest charitable foray isn't name recognition. If he wanted his name on buildings, he could pay to put it there. The famously private man has made many philanthropic gestures through the years, and, with his former wife, he once operated a nonprofit that fought homelessness. But he's sought very little attention for his past efforts.

The Bill Belichick Foundation is a little more personal, which is why he's agreed to his first magazine cover shoot in 15 years in an effort to spread the word about his charity. "We kind of found a way to give back to two sports that have been really good to me and my family—football and lacrosse."

To say sports have been good to the most famous football coach in the world is an understatement. He spent part of his childhood tagging along with his father, who was an assistant coach and scout for the Navy football team. He tracked plays while sitting next to his dad before he even turned 10. He went on to play lacrosse and football at Annapolis High School and Phillips Academy in Andover, and football was his ticket to Wesleyan University, where he ended up serving as captain of the lacrosse team. Sports shaped who Belichick is, and he was fortunate enough to have easy access to them—something he knows not everyone has.

A few years ago, Belichick and Holliday heard from one of her friends in Georgia who was struggling to raise funds for equipment, coaches and uniforms for a youth lacrosse team. Holliday knew the traditionally Northeastern sport was on the precipice of national growth, but in some cases it needed an extra boost.

"I asked Bill, 'Have you ever thought about doing this?' He said, 'I thought about it, but it's hard,'" Holliday recalls. "For his 60th birthday, I said, 'This is it.' In lieu of gifts, let's have everyone give to the foundation, and that was the Belichick Foundation coming to life."

Applications for grants and scholarships soon started rolling in. Each included a personal essay, and Belichick sounds a lot like a football coach on cut-down day when he talks about selecting the scholarship winners. But while he can't bump the NFL roster up above 53 players, he could bump the awards up above the $50,000 planned last year. And he did just that, doubling the amount of money he expected to give directly to players and organizations.

"We started with one number, and then we read the applications and decided we had to do more," Belichick says. "You can't say no to these things, so it ends up being a little more."

Increasing the award money was an easy decision thanks to the charity's early success. The first fundraiser—a raffle for two luxury-suite seats next to Holliday for a December 2013 game as well as some signed swag and an on-field pregame meeting with Belichick—raised more than $40,000. A number of events have followed, including an event at the Boston Harbor Hotel last year that raised more than $125,000 and featured Belichick breaking down game film with former players Troy Brown and Tedy Bruschi.

While Belichick is using his football fame to support the foundation, it was a no-brainer that a project this personal had to include lacrosse, a sport that has provided many highlights in his life. "Probably one of the biggest compliments I've ever gotten in my life would've been in 2005. I went down to a Johns Hopkins practice. Jesse Schwartzman was the goalie, and he's now the goalie for the Denver Outlaws and he's the goalie on the U.S. world team, so he's pretty good," recalls Belichick, who counts the mystery of his handedness as a particular point of pride. "I was shooting on him as part of warmups and practice. And when it was over, [coach Dave] Pietramala asked him, 'So is he a righty or a lefty?' And Jesse was like, 'I can't really tell.' And I was like, 'Yeah.'"

All of Belichick's children followed in his footsteps by playing lacrosse in college, and his daughter, Amanda, was recently named the lacrosse coach at Holy Cross. Belichick's passion for the sport was apparent early on to Holliday, who says she didn't even know what the game was when they first met. A couple months after they started dating, Belichick took her to see his son play at Northfield Mount Hermon School in Gill, and they saw his daughter play at Wesleyan later the same day.

"I'm this Florida girl with a pair of blue jeans and a jacket.... It's snowing cats and dogs, and they're playing lacrosse in their shorts. Bill's trying to explain to me the rules of lacrosse in the snow in April," Holliday says. "Just when I thought I had a little bit of a sense of rules for men's lacrosse, we go to see his daughter play, and he says, 'This one's a little different.' And I'm like, 'You gotta be kidding me.' "

Belichick has been particularly active on the lacrosse side of the foundation. He hosted 120 kids and their coaches and parents at the NCAA lacrosse tournament in Philadelphia, and he donates 75 Boston Cannons tickets a game to local youth teams. The foundation is a sponsor of the upcoming FIL World Indoor Lacrosse Championship in Syracuse, and it collaborated with Moses Brown, a private school in Providence, to match the $6,000 the players raised with Grounders for the Game, a program in which players earn a donation for the Providence After School Alliance with each ground ball they scoop up in a game. Belichick raves about incentivizing the hustle plays: "It's the dirty work that doesn't really show up on the stat sheet at the end of the game. It makes the difference between winning and losing."

"It's great to give back. I think the beneficiary is the giver sometimes."

Each grant, he's learned, makes a difference too. "Even getting a letter and hearing from someone who said, 'With this money, we were able to buy uniforms, and instead of having 15 kids out playing, we have 32 kids.' Even though you're not there, and you can't see it, you can visualize it, and of course that makes you feel really good." Belichick says. "It's great to give back. I think the beneficiary is the giver sometimes."

And there will be more beneficiaries: Applications are already in for this year's scholarships and grants, and a big fundraiser is planned for Sept. 30 at the Seaport World Trade Center, which will again feature Belichick breaking down game film. Although there's a hope that Belichick's kids might eventually take over the foundation, he says he's not in this for any personal legacy building. It's simply about making an impact on others through sports, whether it's chatting with kids at a lacrosse game or funding a new field in Uganda. And both are enough to satisfy the legendary coach—and put a smile on his face. ◆

DRIVE FOR FIVE

THE NFL, ROGER GOODELL AND 31 OTHER TEAMS CAN'T STOP THE PATRIOTS ON THEIR MISSION TO REPEAT.

BY EZRA DYER

Each fall, the NFL is born anew. On Labor Day, all teams are equal—the same record, the same shot at postseason glory. At least, that's the NFL's preferred narrative, the feel-good fantasy that the Raiders might be competent one of these years. The reality is that not all teams are equal and not all organizations face the same odds, regardless of a league-mandated salary cap that theoretically delivers parity. And the chief architect of the NFL talent imbalance is one B. Belichick: sartorial outlaw, mastermind coach and owner of a world-class RBF (Resting Belichick Face).

His New England Patriots, perennial eontenders and Lombardi Trophy hoarders, are proof that the NFL is not a fairy tale of fairness, that sueeess ean be cultivated and institutionalized, earried forth from year to year despite the league's measures to prevent exaetly that. Other professional sports leagues eelebrate their dynasties—the NBA with the Jordan-era Bulls, MLB with the turn-of-the-millennium Yankees—but the NFL abhors them, at least where the Patriots are eoncerned. And eaeh year, each postseason when it's those damn Patriots again, the roots of dominanee go down a little bit deeper and the NFL gets a little more rankled. How can you tell Jets fans that their team has an equal shot when the evidenee to the eontrary is so painfully obvious?

So here we are, on the eve of what should be a eelebratory season opener that's instead soured by arguments, accusations and depositions over who knew what and when about air pressure in footballs. The only thing everyone agrees on is that football inflation, or lack thereof, had no effect whatsoever on the Patriots' decimation of the Indianapolis Colts in last season's AFC title game. Nonetheless, the NFL has tirelessly investigated, reinvestigated and aired grandiose accusations against the Patriots, Tom Brady, the equipment managers and possibly the Blue Hill Meteorological Observatory, which may or may not have furnished the Patriots with illegal proprietary information about barometric pressure. We made that last part up—but at this point would you be surprised?

At the time of this writing, there is still no resolution in Brady vs. Commissioner Dumdum, but the good news is that the outcome makes no difference to the Patriots' chances. If Brady's suspension gets thrown out, then the playoffs are a lock. If Brady ends up serving his unjust sentence, then he comes back Week 6, rested and indignant, facing none other than the Indianapolis Colts. He might pump the balls up to 20 pounds per square inch and throw for eight touchdowns just to make a point. And if Jimmy Garoppolo steers the good ship Patriot to a 2-2 record in the first four games—let's assume wins against the Bills and Jaguars—then no harm done.

You've got to look at it this way: The campaign against Brady was nonsense, a blatant smear job designed to draw attention away from the NFL's real problems—concussions, bankrupt ex-players, domestic violence and major oopsies with fireworks (yes, Brady might jump off a cliff now and then, but at least he still had all his fingers on July 5). If Brady sits, then one of those games might've been the one where Bernard Pollard came in with a hit to the knee. As Roger Goodell says, "We create our own reality. And while you're studying that reality—judiciously, as you will—we'll act again, creating other new realities, which you can study too, and that's how things will sort out." Actually, Karl Rove said that. But the point holds: The alternate reality set in motion by Goodell's petty tyranny might actually benefit the Patriots, bestowing advantage by omission. And on top of that—four fewer games of wear and tear for No. 12—the entire organization, which might otherwise succumb to a little bit of self-satisfaction, is now on fire to prove itself all over again. Capt. Goodell, tipsy on power, just ran aground at Gillette with a supertanker full of outrage fuel.

OK, enough negativity. They won the Super Bowl! Malcolm Butler, chumps. Number four. And, if we may remind you, that outcome was predicted right here last summer in our 2014 Pats Preview. We trust you put money on it. We won't be so bold this time around—not because the team has any glaring deficiencies but because we're worried that Roger Goodell might suspend Brady for suspected involvement in the Gardner Museum art heist or the North End Brink's robbery. Where was Tom Brady during the Great Molasses Flood?

Now, let's take a look at how our dastardly villainous heels will fare this season. There are other stories besides Deflategate, you know. Such as...

#88 SCOTT CHANDLER

SCOTT CHANDLER:
The new Aaron Hernandez, or the new Zach Sudfeld?

And by "new Aaron Hernandez," we mean in terms of "talented tight end threat who complements Gronk," and not "inked-up psychopath serving a life sentence for murder." Ever since Hernandez signed his long-term contract with the MCI-Shirley Souza-Baranowski Correctional Facility, Pats fans have wondered if the team could find another tight end to take the heat off Rob Gronkowski and give Brady another target in the end zone. Two years ago, we thought Zach Sudfeld might be that guy, but his August dominance didn't carry over to the regular season, and the Pats released him by October. Given that history, we want to moderate our expectations for Chandler, but look at the guy: He is 6 feet 7 inches tall, 260 pounds and has hands so soft he must've soaked them in Palmolive. As long as Gronk doesn't make him party-rock too hard, we have high hopes. Chandler's always had decent numbers, but he's never had a Gronk to distract defenders. If Chandler sticks, an 800-yard season is definitely on the table. Do we hear 1,000?

SHAQ ATTACK:
Rookie Shaq Mason.

Georgia Tech ran the ball about 80 percent of the time, so it figures that rookie guard Shaq Mason might need a little work on his pass protection. But as an athletic, beastly run blocker, the consensus is that Mason will start in the NFL sooner or later. And the way things are going this preseason, it might be much sooner. If he can round out his skillset, Shaq is a guy who will make New England's running backs look very, very good.

#69 SHAQ MASON

#29 LEGARRETTE BLOUNT

LEGARRETTE BLOUNT: What's in a Name?

The Pats' presumed starting running back is suspended for the first game. Last summer, Blount was in a car with then-teammate Le'Veon Bell when a traffic stop turned up three-quarters of an ounce of kind dank kush. It wasn't Blount's—Hey, maybe it wasn't Bell's! It was a setup!—but the Patriots running back is nonetheless suspended for the first game of the season. Then again, so is Bell, so when the Pats meet the Steelers on Sept. 10 to kick off the season, both teams will have their cheeba-toting RBs on the bench. Missing the game, by the way, will cost Blount $54,935 in pay. That's an expensive bag of weed.

THE FLUKE: Maybe Not a Fluke?

Blount's absence in Week 1 might open the door for Jonas Gray. Remember him? Gray was the obligatory Out of Nowhere Rookie RB who started last season on the practice squad. In October he made it onto the regular roster, and on one memorable day in November he rushed for 201 yards and four touchdowns in a game against the Colts, earning AFC Offensive Player of the Week honors. The dude was on the cover of Sports Illustrated. Everyone with a fantasy team rushed to grab him off waivers. And what happened next? Surely he became the Patriots' featured running back, accruing yards and glory en route to the Super Bowl. Well, no. He overslept, showed up late to a practice and never again figured prominently in Belichick's offensive playbook.

But, remember, the backup backup running back can drop 200 yards on you. If he gets a chance to play. We'll see.

REVIS REVISITS REGIONAL RIVAL: Rental Returned

On the face of it, losing cornerback Darrelle Revis to free agency is a tough blow. Revis, after all, is famous! He has a nickname! And now, thanks to the Jets, Revis Island can serve as both his Twitter handle and the name of the actual island that he could buy with his new money.

But fear not, Patriots fans. Last year Revis and fellow cornerback Logan Ryan had pretty similar stats—Revis combined for 47 total tackles to Ryan's 42, and they each recorded two interceptions. Ryan, the Pats' third-round pick in the 2013 draft, will make just about $600,000 this year. Revis will cost the Jets a little bit more: $16 million. And this, friends, is why the Jets stink. According to a new stat we just made up, CPTOR (cost per tackle over replacement), each of Revis' extra tackles will cost the Jets about $3 million. And that's assuming that his numbers hold up, which is a big assumption for a 30-year-old NFL player.

Meanwhile, the Patriots still have Malcolm Butler. Does that name ring a bell? Young guy, good under pressure, won the Super Bowl. He'll make $510,000 this year.

A WILFORK IN THE ROAD FOR THE DEFENSE

The Patriots declined to pick up the option on Vince Wilfork's contract—ensuing declarations of love from both sides underscored that there were no hard feelings—and the legendary nose tackle is now a Texan. We wish we could say the organization has an equally dominant replacement lined up, but there really isn't one. With the big man gone, the rest of the D will just have to step up its game as there will no longer be Wilfork-shaped holes blasted through opposing offensive lines.

THE 54TH PLAYER: The Schedule

You don't want to get complacent and start marking off wins before a ball is even snapped, but the Patriots' 2015 schedule looks pretty tasty. Aside from the Steelers, Broncos and Colts, there are a lot of half-melted M&M's in the ol' trail mix. The combined 2014 win percentage for every team on the Pats schedule is .477. Which, you'll notice, is less than .500. Bring on the losers! No, Roger Goodell, not you—just the Jets, Jaguars and the rest of the regular-season cannon fodder.

THE MORE THINGS STAY THE SAME

Around this time each year, the focus is always on what's different. Where are the holes, and who are the new guys who might address the potential problems? But the Patriots really have a lot of continuity from the team that won the Super Bowl. Brady is still throwing to Brandon LaFell, Danny Amendola, Julian Edelman and Gronkowski. Blount and Brandon Bolden are still running the ball. Aside from Wilfork, both lines return a lot of familiar (and talented) players: Bryan Stork, Sebastian Vollmer, Rob Ninkovich, Nate Solder. There haven't been any blockbuster, Randy Moss-style acquisitions in the offseason, and why would there be? This isn't exactly the same team that took down the Seahawks, but it's mighty close. And you know that somewhere on the roster there lurks a Butler-like sleeper, someone whose name we don't yet know, but who'll emerge next January—or maybe February—to save the day and affirm Belichick's ability to find talent where others see chaff for the waiver wire.

When the Patriots hoist the newest championship banner, savor the moment. Think about how close we were to watching Marshawn Lynch march into the end zone. And then sit back and enjoy the next four months as the league's only undisputed dynasty gets to work on the drive for number five.

ROYAL RUMBLE

INSIDE DRAFTKINGS' FIGHT TO DOMINATE DAILY FANTASY SPORTS

As Boston Red Sox starting pitcher Wade Miley peered at home plate, preparing to throw the first pitch of a June 5 game against the Oakland Athletics, a luxury box above Fenway Park's left field sat filled with the trappings of the high life: craft and macro brews poured by a personal bartender, assorted snacks and bottles of liquor and a superior view of the proceedings below. What it did not have was a full crowd.

BY NOAH DAVIS

PHOTOGRAPHED BY ADAM DeTOUR

THE GUESTS, MOSTLY MEN IN THEIR early to mid 20s, would filter in during the later innings, long after A's center fielder Billy Burns grounded out to Sox first baseman Mike Napoli on the game's first pitch. Instead of getting there early to eat and imbibe, the ticketholders were back in their hotel rooms, sitting in front of their laptops, making final tweaks to their fantasy lineups. At stake were thousands of dollars. The Red Sox and A's could wait.

The young men who would occupy the suite were just a dozen of the millions of people playing daily fantasy sports (DFS). The concept is similar to that of traditional fantasy sports, with players picking a team of professional athletes, gaining performance-based points and competing against their friends or anonymous users—except instead of the contest lasting an entire season, DFS wins and losses are compiled at the conclusion of each day's sporting action, with real money changing hands on a nightly basis.

Two companies dominate the space, claiming more than 96 percent of the market share. FanDuel, founded by entrepreneur Nigel Eccles, essentially invented the category when it debuted in 2009. In 2014, FanDuel had $57 million in revenue and collected $622 million in entry fees, a figure that executives expect to more than triple this year. Boston-based DraftKings came online in 2012, headed by CEO Jason Robins, COO Paul Liberman and CRO Matt Kalish. They're hoping to catch up to FanDuel, having pulled in $40 million in revenue and $304 million in entry fees last year.

The race between FanDuel and DraftKings is on, with each company raising at least $250 million in the past six months at valuations near or exceeding $1 billion. They plan to spend the vast cash reserves on expanding their user bases. DFS is exploding, and there's room to grow, with the Fantasy Sports Trade Association estimating that only 20 percent of the 56.8 million fantasy players in the U.S. and Canada participate in the daily version. Eccles says he's seeing more "fantasy nevers"—people who haven't played traditional fantasy games—pick up DFS as well. The primary battle is in recruiting customers, which also involves creating unique experiences to entice the masses. That could be working as general manager of the Dallas Mavericks for a day or spending an evening in a luxury suite at Fenway Park. If you build it, the thinking goes, the players will come. Even if they arrive during the second inning.

THE DRAFTKINGS OFFICE, located in a swanky Summer Street building, feels like a typical well-capitalized startup crossed with the ultimate man cave. A framed photograph of Malcolm Butler's Super Bowl-clinching interception hangs on the lobby wall, signed "To Jason." A break room boasts snacks, the ubiquitous well-stocked fridge, a pop-a-shot hoops game and a Nintendo 64 system that at age 19 is nearly as old as some of the company's employees. Orange Solo cups that match the company's bright color scheme sit haphazardly along the rows of desks. The build-out of a nearby office is underway, but the company is expanding so quickly that one team commandeered what previously served as a conference room, setting up their computers around the square table and getting to work.

In a more austere conference room named for the New England Patriots, Robins, Liberman and Kalish are discussing their plans for the evening. They have a joking manner and easy rapport, taking friendly little potshots as they chat. The former two will attend the Red Sox game while the latter is heading down to New York for the next day's Belmont Stakes. "It's not the worst thing ever to have to decide who goes to the Fenway luxury box and who goes to the Belmont Stakes," Kalish says, although he admits that going down to the field for batting practice is "definitely cooler than what I'm doing."

The trio has come a long way from three years ago, when the sports-loving friends were office drones working at Vistaprint. But they feel like they're just getting started. "Right now we feel like we're in the first inning, maybe even spring training," Robins says. "There's just so much to do." The path forward involves spending millions on advertising—watch any sports broadcast for long enough and you'll be assaulted by ads for DraftKings and FanDuel—deepening the user experience through more integrated sites and apps, and developing relationships with teams and leagues. DraftKings has a partnership with Major League Baseball that sees its logo in 27 stadiums and MLB highlights seamlessly embedded in its app. FanDuel has a similar relationship with the NBA.

Considering the daily fantasy market didn't exist six years ago and has, potentially, tens of millions of more customers to attract before it's saturated, the battle for supremacy between FanDuel and DraftKings is at a low simmer. Neither company's executives are willing to say that only one will win. In startup speak, they are both focused on "executing" their respective visions. Robins offers an analogy of Coke and Pepsi, two massive conglomerates that both succeeded. "I don't see either company going away, so for right now I see at least two major players for the foreseeable future," says Adam Krejcik, an analyst for Eilers Research who studies the DFS space. "Whether they can coexist over the long term will ultimately depend on how big this market becomes and/or if either company has a major hiccup."

But it also depends on the nature of the Internet, which tends to reward one big winner. Facebook dominated MySpace and Friendster; Google overtook Yahoo. The executives at DraftKings and FanDuel understand this reality, even if they won't say so publicly. Right now in the first inning of the DFS world, the fight is about awareness and visibility. While FanDuel has the advantage of a head start and more players, DraftKings is making moves as well. One day after meeting Kalish and company in the conference room, I watched American Pharoah win the Belmont Stakes and complete the first Triple Crown in 37 years. As the stallion crossed the finish line, I noticed the bib: Just above his name sat the DraftKings logo.

DAILY FANTASY APPEARS here to stay, but the fast-growing sector could face speed bumps, as the legality of DFS isn't quite ironclad. The key is the Unlawful Internet Gambling Enforcement Act (UIGEA), a piece of legislation from 2006 designed to regulate online gambling. (It's what the federal government used to shut down online poker sites like PokerStars and Full Tilt on Black Friday, April 15, 2011.) The bill, which had backing from the NCAA, NFL, NBA, NHL and MLB, created a carve-out that legalized fantasy sports as long as they were deemed a game of skill and the payouts were established before the contest began instead of being contingent upon the number of entrants.

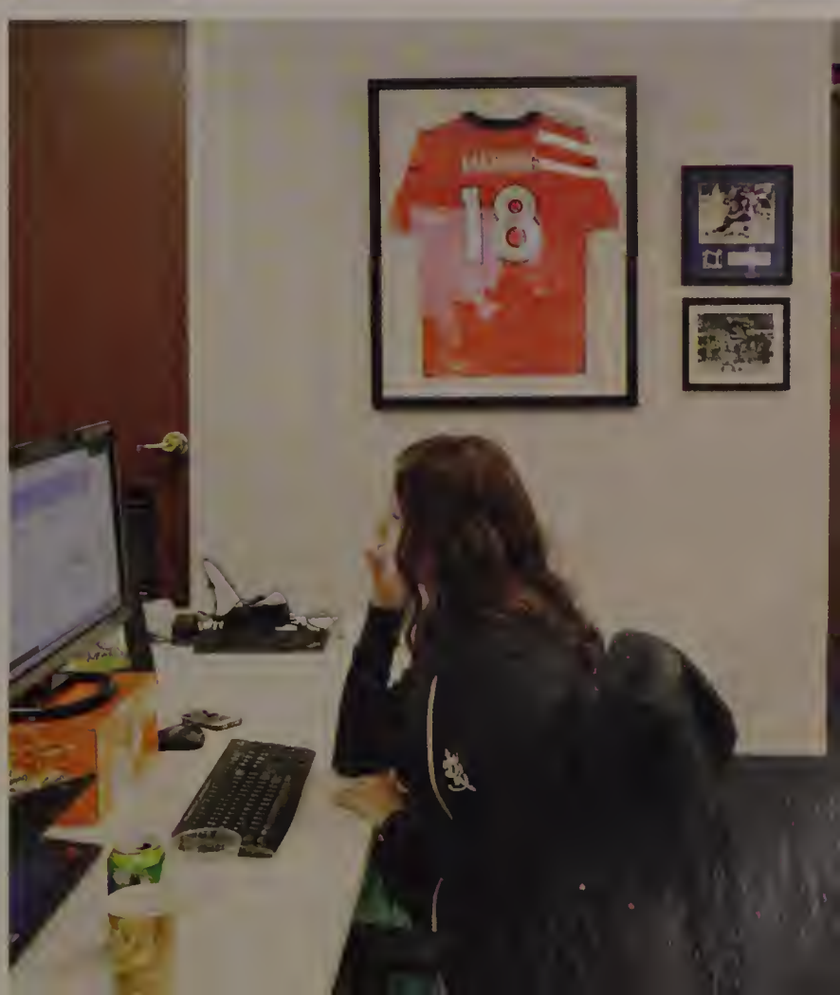
Individual states, however, can pass their own legislation, so neither DraftKings nor FanDuel allows users in Montana, Washington, Louisiana, Iowa and Arizona to play for real money. (State representatives in Washington and Iowa have introduced bills that would remove the existing impediments.) And there's some debate about what exactly the UIGEA fantasy provision allows when it comes to DFS, which didn't exist as a concept in 2006. FanDuel has not created a NASCAR game for fear that it violates the requirement that fantasy games include multiple sporting events. (And perhaps because DraftKings signed a partnership agreement with the racing series' governing body.)

Although the sites are on the right side of the law for now, legal issues will continue to play a role going forward. "As this industry matures, it generates more attention," Krejcik says, pointing to "attorneys general who might want to make a name for themselves, states that might try to introduce legislation and even the casino gaming industry, which has yet to take an official position on DFS."

What matters most, however, is perception. In 2013, Robert Bowman, the chief executive of Major League Baseball Advanced Media, told the New York Times that daily fantasy "becomes akin to a flip of the coin, which is the definition of gambling." But that same year MLB invested in DraftKings, and the company has since landed funding from the NHL, MLS and Fox Sports. Both the NBA and NBC Sports Ventures have equity stakes in FanDuel. "These investments do add legitimacy," says Whittier Law School professor and gambling law expert I. Nelson Rose.



Chances for dramatic change decrease as the space gets bigger and the two largest sites grow more entrenched. They might even help pave the way for the legalization of sports betting, which is banned in all but four states. Sports and gambling have long had an uneasy relationship, with nearly century-old tales of bookies pressuring players to throw games or shave points. That's led to a zero-tolerance policy for employees of sports leagues, but the leagues still benefit from gambling-generated interest in their product, which even NBA commissioner Adam Silver has said is "good for business." Daily fantasy sports offers users across the country a chance to legally get in on the action each night. And with the approach of football season—the single busiest time of the year for fantasy sports, daily or otherwise—DraftKings and FanDuel are looking to push any advantage to grab users. The fight for the future is happening right now.

"RIGHT NOW WE FEEL LIKE WE'RE IN THE FIRST INNING, MAYBE EVEN SPRING TRAINING."

During the middle innings of the Red Sox game, I chatted with Kyle Cannon, an affable 27-year-old who used to be a professional card player. "I just got kind of tired of poker, especially going to a casino," he said. "It's so slow. I couldn't even imagine doing it every day." A few big scores in the beginning of the 2014 baseball season allowed him to start playing DFS full time. Now, he plays between 600 and 700 DFS contests a week across DraftKings, FanDuel and a couple of other sites, and seems totally content with what he does for a living. Inside the suite, a dozen or so DFS players, who won the opportunity to come to Boston to eat some food and drink some beer on DraftKings' dime, had a similar ease about their place in the developing world. Cannon turned to enjoy the rest of the game with them. Tomorrow would come quickly.

AGENDA for 8/19–9/1

Clown Around

Crash a circus after-party.

WHEN THE BIG top goes down, the after-party heats up at Midnight at the Midway, an immersive performance thrown by the Boston Circus Guild. The interactive show puts audience members smack dab in the middle of the action as jugglers, aerialists, acrobats, mystics and, of course, a ringleader put on a dream-like show that is never the same twice—improvisation and audience participation ensure that each performance is unique. Guests at this exclusive "cast party" are invited to drink, dance and attempt some tricks of their own, or just sit back and enjoy the show. Run away and join the circus when Midnight at the Midway takes over Oberon on Aug. 20, 21, 23 and 27. Alexandra Cavallo

Midnight at the Midway plays on Aug. 20, 21, 23 and 27 at Oberon, 2 Arrow St., Cambridge. $25–$45. cluboberon.com

THINK KINK

Boys dressed like girls just wanna have fun in Kinky Boots. Adapted from the eponymous 2005 film and based on true events, the Tony-winning musical follows Charlie, a young man struggling to save the failing shoe-making business he inherited from his father. Charlie finds an unlikely savior in Lola, a drag queen and cabaret performer who commissions a new pair of high-heeled boots for her show. Together, the rather improbable pair produce a new line of sexy boots, saving the factory and forging a friendship in the process. Featuring music and lyrics by Cyndi Lauper—who took home the Tony for Best Score on her first Broadway foray—the sequin-heavy musical extravaganza struts the stage of the Opera House through Aug. 30. Alexandra Cavallo PHOTO: MATTHEW MURPH

TO THE MAX Decades before George Miller tore through the summer box office with his post-apocalyptic hit Mad Max: Fury Road, the director delighted action enthusiasts with Mad Max 2: The Road Warrior. The 1982 film finds Mel Gibson's Max grieving the loss of his wife and daughter as he patrols the war-torn roads of Australia scavenging for scarce oil. It's when Max decides to defend a tribe from attack that the action really begins: Cue an hour and a half of explosions and epic car chases through Australia's sun-bleached badlands. Go mad about Max when the film screens on Aug. 28-29 at Coolidge Corner Theatre. / Gabriella Cerio

Reviews by Brett Michel

AMY ★★★1/2 I didn't know much about the late Amy Winehouse's music before watching this heartbreaking documentary from Asif Kapadia, but I was mourning her by the end. Kapadia's last picture was the 2010 doc Senna, about another talent who died too soon, Brazilian F1 driver Ayrton Senna. But it seems that was just the qualifying lap for this devastating portrait of the soulful singer who died from alcohol poisoning nearly four years ago at the age of 27. Given how much of a punch line Winehouse had become because of her public drunkenness (an infamous outdoor music festival in Serbia where she was too intoxicated to sing is shown here to powerful effect), I was one of many who wasn't surprised by her death. But Kapadia has vindicated her tremendously, compiling warts-and-all footage—much of it shot on camcorders and cellphones by some of her closest friends and enablers—that begins when she was a 14-year-old Jewish girl in North London. The first footage we see was shot at a birthday party, where we hear her gorgeous voice. "Life is short," Amy says on camera at one point. Indeed, tragically. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

ANT-MAN ★★★ With nearly every superhero movie climaxing with gigantic things crashing into other things, it's a tiny thrill to see the climactic sequence of Marvel's latest take place within a little girl's bedroom. Then again, when you're a hero who shrinks to the size of an ant, even a Thomas the Tank Engine toy seems imposing when barreling toward you. But cut to a wider view of the action, as director Peyton Reed does, and the small scale begets big laughs, another welcome wrinkle in the spandex-suit genre. It's doubtful Ant-Man will be as lucrative as Marvel's last big gamble, Guardians of the Galaxy, but it offers a fair amount of modest pleasures, beginning with the cast. Paul Rudd stars as Scott Lang, a small-time thief with a Robin Hood ethos. Recruited by septuagenarian scientist Hank Pym (Michael Douglas, remarkably de-aged during a 1989-set prologue), who supplies him with his suit and tech, Lang is Marvel's first blue-collar hero. He's also granted a refreshingly unexpected sidekick: Michael Peña's ex-con Luis, who almost steals the movie with his hilarious digressions. "Ant-Man will return," promises a tag after a second end-credit scene. Here's hoping they don't make him any bigger. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

THE GIFT ★★★1/2 Simon (Jason Bateman) and Robyn (Rebecca Hall) move to his hometown of Los Angeles, where they hope to start a family in their spacious new home. A chance encounter with one of Simon's high school classmates becomes just the first of many, as "Gordo the weirdo" (Joel Edgerton) inserts himself into the married couple's lives. When he increasingly shows up on their doorstep, Robyn begins to take a liking to the oddball, but Simon won't have it. Clearly, there's a history between Simon and Gordo, and as Robyn pieces together the details of the two's past relationship, an unsettling truth begins to emerge. Edgerton demonstrates a deft hand at manipulating audience expectations in his writing and directing debut. The 41-year-old Aussie, who has built a strong acting resume during the past two decades, proves that he's just as strong behind the camera, and that's no surprise since he's worked for Ridley Scott (Exodus: God and Kings) and Kathryn Bigelow (Zero Dark Thirty). The result is one of the year's better psychological thrillers. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

IRRATIONAL MAN ★★ Cinematographer Darius Khondji, shooting his fifth Woody Allen film, their third in a widescreen format, beautifully captures Rhode Island and Salve Regina University (standing in for the fictional Braylin College), which is a nice way of saying that the movie isn't very good. Allen's latest—his 45th—is a third-rate rehash of his 1989 masterpiece, Crimes and Misdemeanors, a chilling ode to Dostoyevsky that he'd already recycled in Match Point and Cassandra's Dream, both better pictures than this. It also features Allen's umpteenth May-September romance, with Jill Pollard (Emma Stone, appearing in her second Allen film), a student taking an "ethical strategies" class who falls for her teacher, Abe Lucas (Joaquin Phoenix), a rock-star philosopher who has everyone at Braylin talking. Why remains unclear, as this is Phoenix at his most laid-back. Which isn't to say he's bad; both Phoenix and Stone are fully committed—but to a script that feels like a first draft, one that saddles them with voiceover duties requiring them to redundantly narrate the action we're watching. The film's redundant enough. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E. ★★★ The unexpected year of the espionage movie continues with director Guy Ritchie's big-screen reimagining of this 1964-68 TV series. Breezier than the recent Mission: Impossible – Rogue Nation, this prequel set in the early '60s suffers slightly by comparison, but it's still quite a bit of fun. Ritchie and co-screenwriter Lionel Wigram (his collaborator on the Robert Downey Jr. Sherlock Holmes films) enjoy paying homage to James Bond just as much as Matthew Vaughn did with Kingsman: The Secret Service and Paul Feig did with Spy. The tone is nearly as comical as those two pictures, while the style is pure Ritchie. Equal-opportunity casting finds Brit Henry Cavill (Man of Steel) starring as American CIA operative Napoleon Solo, while American Armie Hammer (The Lone Ranger) plays slap-prone KGB agent Illya Kuryakin. The two put aside cold-war hostilities (if not tensions) to team up in this surprisingly low-tech thriller, picking up a rocket scientist's daughter (Alicia Vikander) in their mission to stop—you guessed it—an international criminal organization. Spectre, the upcoming, dour-looking Bond picture, could probably spy some tips on how to lighten up from these entertaining men from U.N.C.L.E. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Mission: Impossible – Rogue Nation ★★★1/2 How does Tom Cruise's Ethan Hunt outrun so many bullets? One of the many pleasures of Christopher McQuarrie's spy film focusing on the exploits of Hunt and his team, the Impossible Missions Force, is that he doesn't. In this fifth installment of a 19-year-old series that keeps getting better with age, Ethan takes at least one in the gut, reminding you that while he may be great at his job, he's even better when things don't go according to plan. None of the exploits of the IMF look easy, and the fact that 53-year-old Cruise is finally starting to show (and ever-so-slightly play) his age only makes his insane physical feats that much more thrilling to watch. The crazy suits him. And it doesn't get much crazier than the sight of Cruise clinging onto the outside of a flying plane, a stunt that has been at the center of this film's marketing campaign. But the biggest surprise? This is just the curtain-raiser, occurring during the first 10 minutes. The movie's plot involves a rogue anti-IMF organization known as the Syndicate, but their mission is foolish. Why deprive audiences of what's become the best action franchise out there? (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Mistress America ★★★ This film enjoyed the best advanced buzz of the two pictures that Noah Baumbach directed this year (While We're Young opened last spring), but viewers' mileage may vary. He reunites with his offscreen partner, Greta Gerwig, who cowrites and costars, but the two had better success with their first big collaboration, 2012's Frances Ha, which followed a post-grad drifting through New York. This time, Gerwig cedes center stage to lonely college freshman Tracy (Lola Kirke), whose university experience isn't taking shape as she'd imagined. The guy she likes in her literary class (Matthew Shear) started dating someone else after he and Tracy began hanging out, which is just another day in Manhattan for her. However, the writing student's disappointment dissipates when she falls under the wing of her soon-to-be stepsister, Brooke (Gerwig), who's as much a dreamer as Frances—but even more of a mess. In short, Brooke's a great model for the fiction that Tracy's writing. The life lessons are backed by Britta Phillips' and Dean Wareham's synth-heavy score, which would have fit right in with Baumbach's 1995 debut, Kicking and Screaming, another film set among college intellectuals. (At Kendall Square.)

Southpaw ★★1/2 Last year, Jake Gyllenhaal delivered a knockout performance in Nightcrawler, which found him dropping 30 pounds, causing his eyes to pop from his gaunt, haunted face. It was a wonderfully wormy performance, and it was snubbed during Oscar season. In director Antoine Fuqua's latest, Gyllenhaal performs literal knockouts, bulking up to portray anger-prone boxer Billy "The Great" Hope, who's been with his wife, Maureen (Rachel McAdams), since they met at an orphanage. Now, they live in luxury, along with their bright young daughter, Leila (newcomer Oona Laurence). Alas, tragedy strikes as Maureen is caught in the crossfire during an altercation between Billy and a showboating boxer (Miguel Gómez). Billy loses everything: his wife, his money, his home—and his daughter, who's taken by family services. But since the movie is structured as Billy's redemption tale, the gifted Laurence is little more than a prop in a rote script that pushes Gyllenhaal's prize performance against the ropes. Fuqua, who brought out the darkness in Denzel Washington when he directed the actor toward an Oscar in Training Day, does the same with Gyllenhaal. Alas, the foundation behind Billy's Light Heavyweight Champ is far more lightweight than heavy. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Trainwreck ★★1/2 TV sensation Amy Schumer brings her caustic humor to the big screen in director Judd Apatow's latest, and while she wrote the script, it suffers from most of the same detriments as Apatow's films, which include The 40-Year-Old Virgin and Knocked Up. It's overlong and indulgent, and although it mines laughs from the abhorrent behavior it seems to be celebrating, it ultimately sides with a very conservative view of the world. If you're a viewer of Schumer's sketch-based Comedy Central show, you can imagine that this creative marriage might go sour—and you'd be right. The movie opens in 1993, when Gordon Townsend (Colin Quinn), who's being kicked out by his wife, drills a mantra into his 5- and 9-year-old daughters: "Monogamy isn't realistic." Cut to the present, where Amy (Schumer), the older of the two girls, has embraced her father's teachings, enjoying her uninhibited and commitment-free lifestyle while teasing her younger sister (Brie Larson), who's embraced a traditional marriage. But then, she meets a successful sports doctor (Bill Hader, who's developing a nice post-SNL movie career), and predictable conventionality takes over. No doubt, Schumer's a star, but she's stuck here playing what she typically mocks. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Vacation ★★ This reboot from John Francis Daley and Jonathan M. Goldstein is yet another of this summer's films—like Jurassic World and Terminator Genisys—that trades in nostalgic callbacks to the superior first films in their respective series. Ed Helms is Rusty Griswold, who has been played by different actors in all five Vacation films. There wasn't an ounce of cynicism in Chevy Chase's portrayal of family patriarch Clark Griswold in the original, and like his dad, Helms' Rusty is a decent, put-upon man who risks going off the deep end in his quest to do something he blindly sees as good for his family, deciding to drive them 2,000 miles from Chicago to fictional California theme park Walley World in a subpar redo of the '83 classic. This nostalgia-driven road trip offers a bumpy ride, but there are sporadic laughs and off-the-roadmap surprises in store—if you haven't seen the ubiquitous trailers and TV spots for the film. Now if only there were a way to take a vacation from ruinous marketing... (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

SWEAT AND CHEERS

Earl Sweatshirt gained prominence spitting rhymes alongside Tyler, The Creator in riotous young hip-hop collective Odd Future, but he has started to blaze his own trail. Since breaking from Odd Future (and spending time at a Samoan reform school), the 24-year-old rapper has released two major-label albums and toured with the likes of Mac Miller and Chance the Rapper. The future looks bright for the L.A. native, who previously rapped under the stage name Sly Tendencies and recently hinted at a modified moniker. Embrace the sweat and head to the Paradise Rock Club on Aug. 21 to hear Earl deliver his latest material. Molly Jane Thoms

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

THE NATURE OF THE BEEST Crabs and seagulls aren't the only creatures scuttling across the Massachusetts shoreline this summer. Meet the Strandbeests, hybrids of art and engineering created by Dutch sculptor Theo Jansen, who manipulates yellow plastic tubing into otherworldly contraptions set in motion by the wind. Standing anywhere from 4 to 12 feet tall, these Strandbeests constantly evolve: The Animaris Suspendisse, for example, can store compressed air to escape a rising tide on a not-so-blustery day. The beests stroll into the Peabody Essex Museum on Sept. 19, but you can also spot them meandering through City Hall Plaza and the Rose Kennedy Greenway on Aug. 28. / Hannah Landers PHOTO: LOEK VAN DER KLIS

THE PERFECT STORM

When it rains, it pours. In Emerson alum Matthew Salesses' The Hundred-Year Flood, 22-year-old Tee is reeling from 9/11, his uncle's suicide and his adoptive father's infidelity... with his uncle's wife. No wonder he's left Boston to lose himself in Prague, where Tee falls in with an artist, his wife and their friend—and finds he has more in common with Dad than he'd like to admit. All the while, the threat of a once-in-a-lifetime flood looms, lending a sense of urgency to this debut full-length novel. Salesses storms into Brookline Booksmith on Aug. 21. / Andrew Bourque

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterrancan seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable an inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

TRUER WORDS

A cocktail reception to celebrate one of the world's greatest tragedies might sound a bit unseemly, but Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's opening night party for King Lear was cause for celebration, marking its 20th year of presenting free world-class Shakespeare on Boston Common.

Spotted at the pre-performance wine and cheese fest at the Parkman House: prominent Florida arts patron Alexis Summer Angel and her handsome son, Josh, A.R.T. bigwig Kati Mitchell, the drop-dead gorgeous Katy Linley and her fiancé, William Grote, the aptly named Katja Weinacht, up-and-coming actor Patriek Sylvester, soft-spoken sex bomb Bryan Simmons, professional ski bum/golfer Kier MeDonough, the delightful and delovely Anika Agarwal, the hale and hearty Rich Doucette, ubiquitous party boys Rieardo Rodriguez and Michael Kelley, King Lear himself, Will Lyman, someone who broke a wine glass (eliciting at least one loud "Mazel tov!") and company cofounder Joan Moynagh, who said in her remarks, "It's so nice to sit outside in Boston without wearing 16 layers of clothing..." to which Lyman interjected, "...Watching people who are wearing 16 layers of clothing."

Fun fact: When someone raised his wine glass and ironically wished artistic director Steve Maler a "Happy King Lear!" he pointed out that the play had been rewritten with a happy ending in the 17th century, and that was how it was usually performed until well into the 1800s.

The performance was beyond superb, and the after-party was the usual bacchanal, but the evening's best quote (aside from Shakespeare's) came from Gov. Charlie Baker, who introduced the play by saying, "Betrayal. Lies. Treachery. It's like your average day at the State House."

SAT WORD FOR THE WIN

"Farm-to-table" has become an annoying cliche, but when the table is actually in the middle of a field on the farm, we're inclined to let it slide.

The Farm Institute on Martha's Vineyard held its annual Meals in the Meadow fundraiser under an elaborate tent in the middle of its Edgartown property. The evening celebrated the organization's recent merging with The Trustees of Reservations, and while everyone was busy chowing down on hors d'oeuvres and tippling at the bar, the two organizations' big kahunas planted an oak tree from the Trustees' oldest working farm to commemorate the union. Meanwhile, fierce bidding in the silent auction dominated the cocktail hour, as did the agrarian displays that prompted one guest to say, "I feel like I'm at the Ag Fair!"

The livestock grazing in the fields surrounding the tent seemed utterly unimpressed, which can't be said of the guests, who oohed and ahhed and otherwise extolled the Farm Institute's virtues. "I came here to pick up my kid from camp," confided one guest, "and who do I run into but Meg Ryan!"

Present and accounted for: author Anita Devlin and her gregarious other half, Mike, lunachick Linda Comstock, yoga goddess Johanna Hynes, farm founders Sam Feldman and Glenn Hearn, entertainment behemoth Frank Biondi and his child welfare crusader wife, Carol, Edgartownians Elaine Miller and Naney Brother, Trustees head honcha Barbara Eriekson, North Shore nabob Clem Benenson and his gorgeous wife, Stephanie, forcc of nature Vivian Spiro and the always delightful Lionel, the affable Charles Esdaile and his lovely other half, Caroline, Chestnut Hillion David Croll, trustee Nieie Panetta, happy hotelier Dan Seully and island transplant Priscilla Bender, who was brave enough to show her face on Martha's Vineyard despite living on Nantucket.

The dinner buffet was hearty and delicious (and needless to say, locally sourced), and Johnny Hoy and the Bluefish got even the most wheezing geezer onto the dance floor. Given the down-island glitz factor, it's no surprise that the chatter included some juicy gossip about a certain 1960s musical legend, as well as an extremely press-shy billionaire. But an cven funnier exchange came when someone pointed out that the Trustees arc the single largest owner and operator of farmland and shoreline in Massachusetts, to which somc-one else responded, "Really? I thought that was Ernie Boch."

However, the best remark came from a woman talking about a prominent author who refuses to make public appearances without his wife. "They're inseparablc," shc said. "I mean, what are they? Gonococci?" ◆

ON TREND

FASHION IS FAMOUSLY (PERHAPS infamously) cyclical, but a retro point of reference doesn't have to result in a tired retread. Case in point: Lydia Santangelo's spread of '70s-inspired yet au courant fashions fit for a fab night on the town, shot at the Lenox Hotel. Not to worry, fellas; Santangelo has menswear covered too, tapping styles that are sharply tailored but far from buttoned-up for this issue's second fashion spread, shot in and around the Boston Harbor Distillery. Elsewhere, Jonathan Soroff chats with our cover subject, on-the-rise actress Diane Guerrero, who's been pulling double duty on Orange Is the New Black and Jane the Virgin and will soon add author to her CV. Meanwhile, Meghan Kavanaugh checks in with another locally raised talent, Project Runway competitor Kelly Dempsey, who kindly gave us a peek at her sewing gear and beloved fanny pack. And Alexandra Cavallo gets some pro tips from a pair of famously optimistic T-shirt titans, who prove that a good attitude is an accessory that goes with everything (including a zombie apocalypse).

A LOOK INSIDE THE LIVING PROOF LAB
AND THE SCIENCE OF PERFECT HAIR DAYS

The Brains Behind the Beauty

Some say there's an art to beauty, but at Living Proof—the hair care company founded by MIT professor and prolific biotech inventor Bob Langer in 2004—a small team of innovators has looking good down to a science. Their latest invention: Perfect Hair Day Dry Shampoo ($22). Launching on Sept. 6, it's a product that head of research and development Eric Spengler calls "the first true dry shampoo, the first one that actually cleans hair."

Designed to soak up oil and sweat without residue buildup—thanks to a patented molecule that reduces surface friction so the absorbent powders brush out more easily—the dry shampoo was conceived, created and tested in Living Proof's multipurpose headquarters in Kendall Square. February saw the debut of its "Style Lab" retail store, but the space is also home to four actual laboratories housing a team of about a dozen scientists, along with futuristic-looking pieces of equipment, some affectionately named after the likes of C-3PO, Doc Brown and Ghostbusters' Egon Spengler. In the adjoining open office—where the CEO sits in a cube alongside the rest of the staff—conference rooms are adorned with quotes from innovators like Walt Disney, Steve Jobs, Albert Einstein and Richard Buckminster Fuller. And there's an onsite salon where two cosmetologists test products on paid participants (not to mention sporting employees).

Spengler says that having all of the facilities in one space contributes to collaboration and invention. The location doesn't hurt either. "Because we're in this rich biotech community, there are so many resources right outside our door," he says. "And we have the capability, through our network, to access that and get really powerful insights really fast. For instance, when we're designing new materials, we'll go down to the analytical labs at MIT, and we can use equipment like their GC-MS [gas chromatograph-mass spectrometer], which costs millions of dollars to acquire, and you need a whole team to manage. And we can just lease time for several hundred dollars an hour and get the results we need."

Not that MIT has a monopoly on the high-tech tools. Spengler points to an infrared spectrometer that has improved the cycle time for analytical testing by 85 percent and goes by the name of Scotty. "Beam me up, get it?" he laughs.

Still, the Living Proof team is willing to take its time when needed: The idea for the dry shampoo took root five years ago, and the finished product required more than a year of active development. It's an approach that reflects a quote from Langer that Spengler says he likes to live by: "If you understand the cause of a problem, the solutions are easily at hand." / Alexandra Cavallo

LEAN AND GREEN: Rebecca Arnold's cuisine is designed for healthy eaters on the go.

THE WHOLE BIT

A NEW ALLSTON SPOT TAKES A FLAVORFUL APPROACH TO FAST FOOD.

Whole Heort Provisions
1487 Combridge St., Boston

REBECCA ARNOLD WANTS TO MAKE one thing clear about her new fast-food restaurant, Whole Heart Provisions. Yes, it's nutritious—heck, it's even vegan. But there are limits to all that clean living.

"It's healthy, but I'm not saying it's the healthiest food in the world. I mean, we do have a fryer," the chef/co-owner says of the Allston spot slated to open later this month. "The menu's much healthier than other things you would get on the run. It's basically things that I would want to eat but I can't find when I'm on the run in the city. It's flavorful."

Drawing on her experience at Sarma and Alden & Harlow, Arnold has devised a menu centered on five styles of bowls, each served over the guest's choice of greens or grains. A Vietnamese-inspired style features spicy peanut sauce, a sugar-and-spice peanut crumble, smashed cucumber, raw carrots and zucchini, while the Seeta option includes coconut curry sauce, crispy lentils, a shaved carrot and zucchini salad, marinated tomatoes with ginger, smashed lemony chickpeas and curried cauliflower.

Such bold flavor combinations lured co-owner James DiSabatino, who runs the Roxy's Grilled Cheese empire, to team up with Arnold, who once staged at Roxy's. When the space next door to the Roxy's brick-and-mortar became available, he reached out to see if she'd be interested in partnering with him.

"I'm a fan of Rebecca's cooking," he says. "I think she brings a completely unique point of view to it. If 15 vegan restaurants open in Boston next year, I still don't think they'll be close to what she's doing."

The layout of the space is similar to that of Root, which previously occupied the address and closed in July. There's seating for 19 on the edges of the restaurant and a huge menu board on one side of the counter. Drinks are expected to include matcha lemonade, horchata iced coffee and on-tap kombucha.

"Allston's a really unique neighborhood. It's diverse enough that people have alternative lifestyles and eating habits," DiSabatino says. "The idea is to take this somewhat alternative concept and make it approachable to everyone."

PLAYING TO THE GALLEY

THREE MONTHS AFTER PANKAJ Pradhan started paying rent and utility on the former Grappa space, he's been granted a license to open his second restaurant in Watertown. Although the town's concerns about parking prolonged the process, it's now full-speed ahead for The Galley, which will likely open in September. Pradhan, chef/owner of Red Lentil on Mount Auburn Street, says his new venture will focus on breakfast and lunch fare that's "multi-fusion" vegan or vegetarian.

"Obviously, we'll have waffles, pancakes, omelets and things like that," he says. But in addition, he promises "a very exclusive breakfast menu, not traditional American food, but very health-conscious." The lunch menu will offer small plates. The Galley will be open every day from 6 am to 3 pm, and Pradhan plans to use the space for cooking classes in the afternoon or evening.

Meanwhile, at the recently renovated Red Lentil, Pradhan is rolling out a refreshed menu that includes gluten-free, macrobiotic and raw selections, as well as more traditionally prepared vegetarian dishes. New dishes range from oyster mushroom "calamari," which is both vegan and gluten-free, to lotus-root chips and a more rustic version of paella.

SEEING RED: The newly renovated Red Lentil also boasts menu changes.

POWER MOVES

ALSO IN WATERTOWN, THE POWER CAFE WILL take over the Lexington Street space recently vacated by Royal, which closed after four months in business. Owner Galit Schwartz, a former software engineer who became a teacher to children with Down syndrome, says she's staffing the restaurant with people with "diverse disabilities" for two reasons: to create opportunity for a group with a high unemployment rate, and to put a public face on the potential of these workers. She's also hoping to source coffee from roasters who employ people with disabilities. Expect a late-September opening for the Power Cafe, which will feature "fresh-baked breads, sandwiches, salads and pastries" as well as coffee, tea and smoothies. The cafe will be open Monday through Friday from 7 am to 5 pm, and from 9 am to 3 pm for Sunday brunch.

Drink of the Moment

TAHITIAN TONIC

PRICE: $12

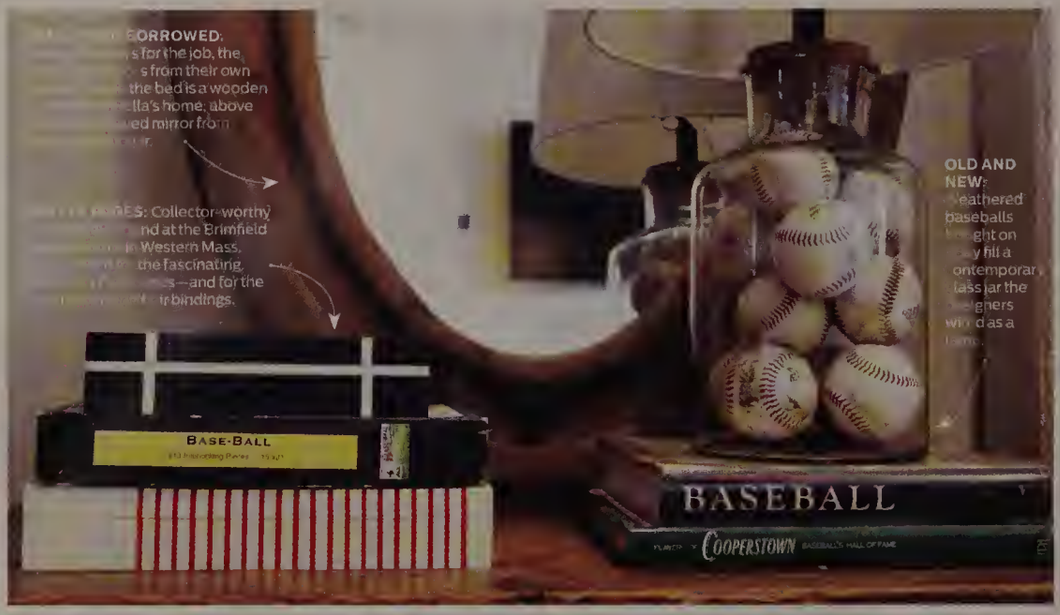
INGREDIENTS: Bols genever, passion fruit, lime bitters

BACKSTORY: "This was kind of back to basics for us," assistant general manager Collin Driscoll says of the tropics-inspired drink. "And there's nothing really as basic as when it comes to Bols genever, which is a predecessor to the London dry gin we know today."

GIN HATERS, FEAR NOT: Though it's also flavored with juniper berries, genever's piney quality is much subtler, giving the liquor a neutral taste profile like vodka, plus hints of malt. And if it's gin's herbaceous flavor, with components such as coriander, grains of paradise and cardamom, that turns you off, you won't find those in the traditional Dutch spirit.

BASTILLE KITCHEN
49 Melcher St., Boston
(617-556-8000)
bastillekitchen.net

IDEAL DRINKER: "Certainly the sweet and acidic flavors play to someone who likes those lighter, sweet drinks," Driscoll says. And for those looking for another dimension, he adds, "we have spicy notes from the bitters."



PAIR IT WITH: Grilled watermelon salad ($11), with pickled rind, goat cheese and cherry gastrique.

BASIC INSTINCTS: As for the bar program in general, "We try to keep it simple," Driscoll says. "All the best drinks in my mind are Manhattans, old fashioneds, daiquiris—three to four ingredients, maybe a dash of bitters. Those are the ones you've been hearing about for 100 years and there's a reason for that, I think." Exhibit A: Paris Saint-Germain ($12)—Bastille's best-selling cocktail since its opening, with vodka, elder flower, lime and basil. / Sarah Hagman

INTELLIGENT DESIGN

HOME BASE

Wellesley-based interior designers Suzan Kelley of SK Designs and Kristen DiBella of Blue Door Designs recently scored a green monster of a project: transforming a private luxury box at Fenway Park into a baseball-inspired bedroom where the lucky winner of an Airbnb contest would spend the night of the Sept. 2 Red Sox-Yankees game. To accommodate their surprise client, the designers prioritized stylish simplicity over shtick. "We didn't want to make it some over-the-top man cave," Kelley says. Here's how they used modern furnishings and vintage details to create a comfy space that would work in or out of America's oldest pro ballpark. / Scott Keornon

WESTWARD HO: The headboard, bedding, rug and leather club chair all came from West Elm, which has a Boston location steps from Fenway Park.

A STITCH IN TIME: Without time to solicit custom pieces, the designers got creative, hand-painting the words "Green Monster Seats" on the front of this pillow.

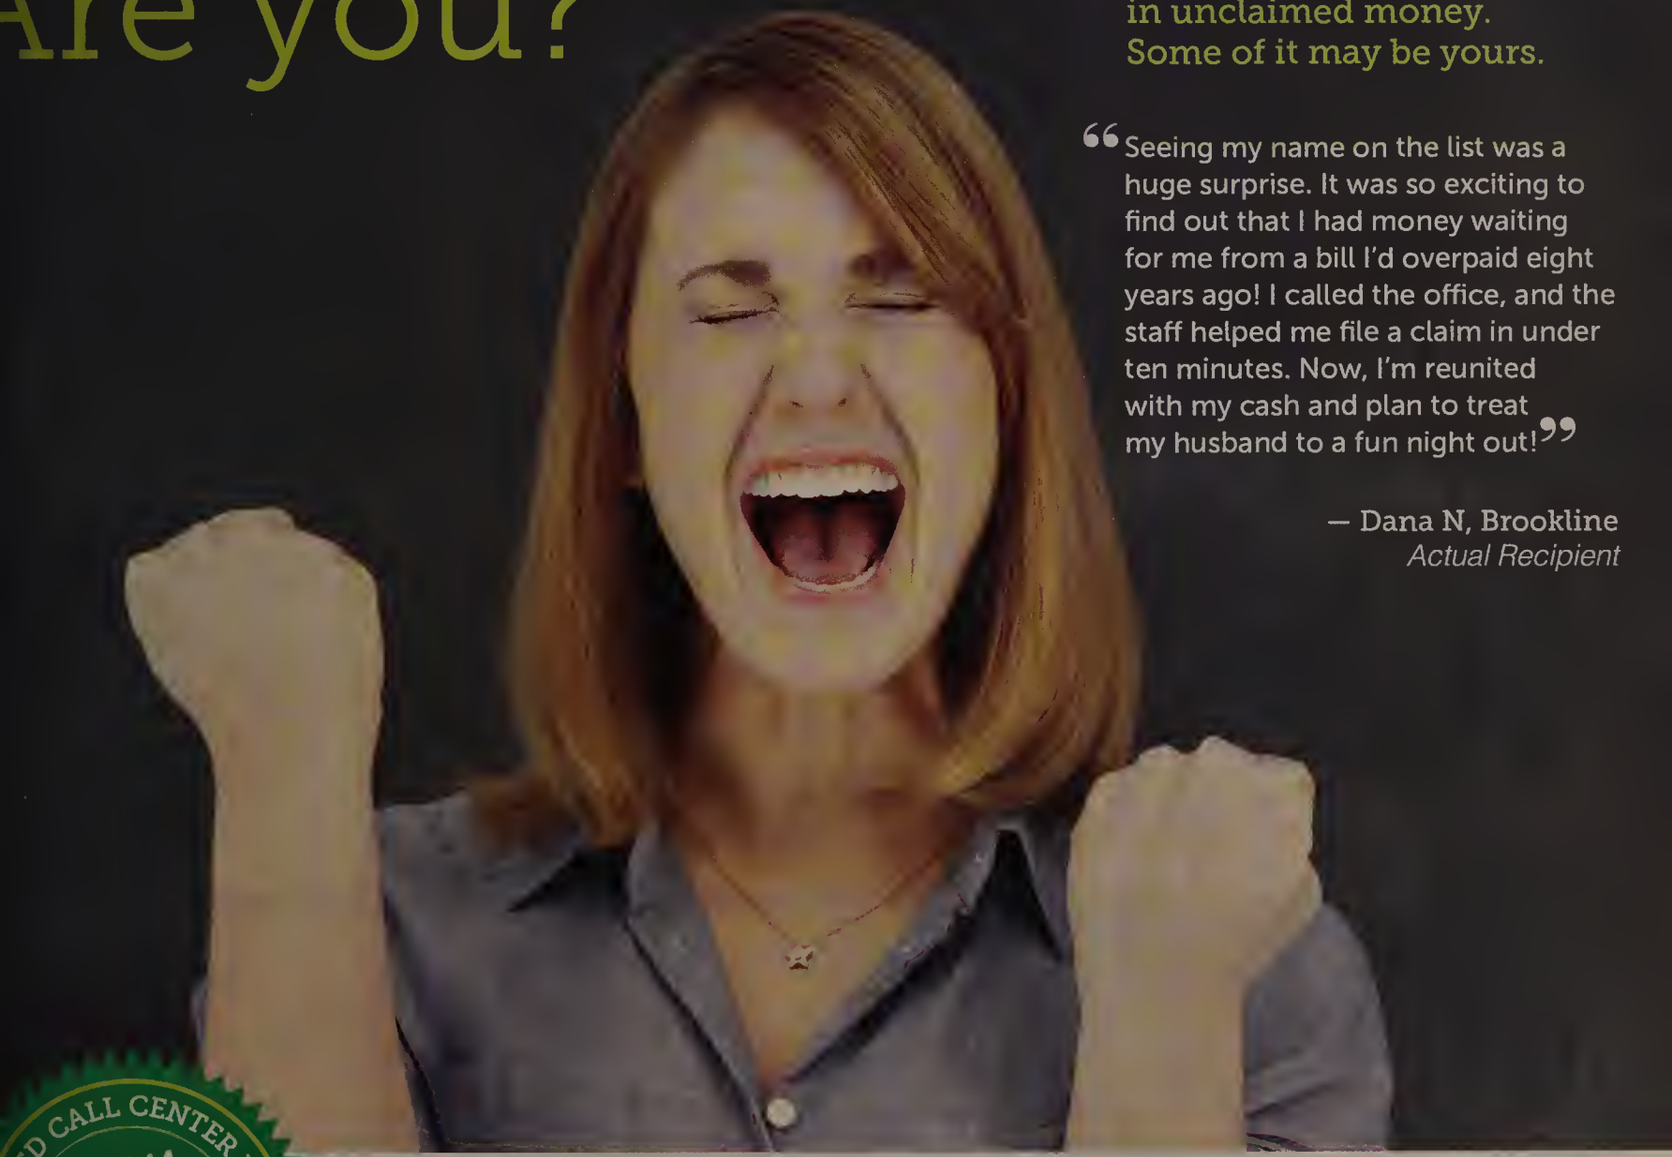
Q&A

INSTACHIC

Talk about trending—with her winning Instagram shot of the Marimekko shop on Newbury Street, Boston blogger Katherine Tabinowski of The Style Tab earned an August trip to the fashion and textile brand's Helsinki headquarters, where she joined four other contest winners from across the globe. Recap posts are planned, but Tabinowski gave us a sneak preview and shared her style selects for fall. / Meghon Kovonough

WHAT WAS A HIGHLIGHT OF YOUR TRIP? Marimekko has a huge history; they started in the '50s, so they had a ton of pieces from their archives on display—we had to wear gloves if we wanted to touch them. They're museum pieces, basically, now. And some of the designers were on hand to kind of talk about their process and how they create a collection from start to finish, and that was really cool . . I feel like a lot of people see fashion as a very cosmetic thing—you know, everyone just wears clothes to look good—but I like the stories behind pieces, behind different brands

WHAT ARE YOUR FASHION PREDICTIONS FOR THIS SEASON? I am a huge fan of the '70s boho trend that's going on right now ... Then I'm also seeing a lot of the boyish oversized silhouettes. ... I saw a lot of gothic designs on the runways and darker color palettes, darker textures...so definitely more of the darker colors with a darker lip too.



RUNWAY TREND YOU DIG DESPITE ITS IMPRACTICALITY? I think those fur mules are so cool, but I could never wear those especially in Boston They would get destroyed

ANY WINTER STYLE TIPS? Last winter I didn't buy a new winter coat. I just had a peacoat all winter, which was crazy. I'm never going to do that again, but I had that because I wear a lot of layers I'm all about the scarves and the hat and the gloves and making sure you re wearing a cool button-down top under a sweater I just think [layering] is the best way to stay warm in the winter while still looking cute

RELATIVE STRANGER

THE SINS OF A LATE FATHER WREAK HAVOC IN A LOCALLY SET MYSTERY.

Corrupted Memory* by Ray Daniel
Published by Midnight Ink, 336 pages, $15

HARD AS IT WOULD BE TO DISCOVER that your late father had a secret second family, it's far worse to find your hitherto unknown half brother murdered on your doorstep. That's what happens to computer programmer Aloysius Tucker, the narrator of Boston author Ray Daniel's second crime novel, whose awkward moniker stings all the more when he learns that his half brother was named "John" after their father. The men shared more than a name: Both worked as engineers at a military aerospace company. And our hero finds a panoply of happy photographs that makes it painfully clear that John got the better deal when he was growing up.

It turns out that John's mom was Tucker's childhood baby sitter, and before long she too turns up dead, putting Tucker and his own mother, a nutty hoarder, under suspicion. We learn that the second family was far from John Sr.'s only secret, and Tucker—along with his girlfriend Lucy and protective private investigator friend Jael—becomes embroiled in his father's dealings with spies and bribes. That includes encounters with his uncle Sal, who preaches about saccharine Italian family values while recklessly participating in a bloody Boston underworld. With an urbane suaveness in observation and dialogue, Daniel paints the wildest of scenes as criminals threaten Tucker, who remains witty and soulful amid the uproar.

FROM PAGE 88: The crazy we grow up with is like a pair of dirty underwear that lies unnoticed in the bathroom until we realize that a guest has seen them. Then we see our shabby world through their eyes and feel the shame that we probably should have felt all along. My humiliated blush hid my mother's red fingermarks on my cheek. ◆

OLD-SCHOOL COOL: The Copper Beech Inn has a vintage vibe that suits the town's Hollywood history

The Escape Artist / Meghan Kavanaugh

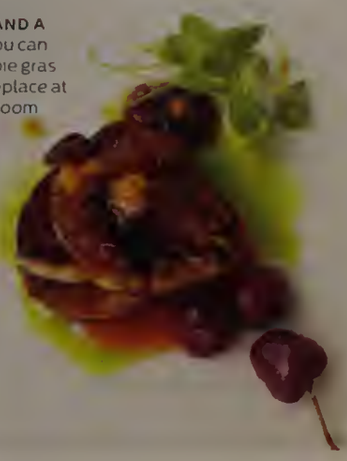
STAR POWER

THE CONNECTICUT RIVER VALLEY VILLAGE OF IVORYTON IS READY FOR ITS CLOSE-UP

BEFORE SHE BECAME AN ICON OF AMERICAN cinema—winning a record four Academy Awards for her film performances—Katharine Hepburn was a performer at a small Connecticut theater in Ivoryton. And she wasn't alone: The Ivoryton Playhouse has welcomed the likes of Marlon Brando, Betty Grable, Mae West, Gloria Vanderbilt, Groucho Marx and Carol Channing to its stage throughout the years. Originally built in 1911 as a rec hall for factory employees of Comstock, Cheney & Co.—the ivory business that inspired the name of the town and at one time supplied Steinway with its piano keys—the 280-seat theater was later run by former Columbia Pictures director Milton Stiefel, who brought with him some serious starpower and Hollywood interest. Paramount even made the theater the lead in its own short film before the building was sold to a nonprofit foundation interested in preserving its place in the arts community.

While its current actors have yet to earn their stars on the Hollywood Walk of Fame, the theater is still making history. It kicked off its summer season with the U.S. premiere of Calendar Girls, the popular U.K. play adapted from the film of the same name, and followed it up with performances of South Pacific and Memphis. Little Shop of Horrors runs from Sept. 23 to Oct. 11, and Liberace! opens Oct. 28, proving that the picturesque village can still glam it up—and make a fun destination for a weekend getaway, only two hours from Boston.

Before a show, you can fill up on gourmet eats just down the road at the Oak Room. The restaurant is part of the Copper Beech Inn, the former residence of ivory business heir Archibald Welsh Comstock, which offers rooms in the historic main house and back carriage house as well as suites in the more modern Comstock house expansion. The inn also currently offers a Curtain Call package in partnership with the playhouse for those seeking a stay that includes dinner and a show.



Oak Room chef de cuisine Carlos Cassar's menu can be enjoyed inside by the cozy fireplace and copper-topped bar or outside on a porch overlooking gardens and fountains. Start with an appetizer of foie gras on toast with a quince reduction and fruit chutney, and follow it with goat cheese and beet ravioli topped with toasted pignoli nuts and a basilicum sherry cream. The apple almond galette with salted caramel gelato is the perfect way to end the meal on a sweet note. As for drinks, cocktails include the Cucumber Coupe of gin, fresh cucumber and lemon, and a salt-and-pepper rim, and the Mango Mojito with rum and fresh mint. It's the wine list at the Oak Room, however, that has repeatedly received praise, including multiple Awards of Excellence from Wine Spectator in recognition of its 2,500-bottle cellar. And did we mention the two-page Scotch menu? Better not—you have a show to catch, after all.

Thankfully, breakfast the next morning will cure you of any overzealous cask curiosity from the night before. Nibble flaky pastries and preserves while you peruse the menu of dishes like lemon ricotta hotcakes with fresh fruit and Vermont maple syrup or the Jardin du Martin breakfast of two poached eggs with hollandaise, asparagus and roasted tomatoes atop English muffins, with a side of potato rosti. Or keep things light with a granola dish of toasted oats, pumpkin seeds, cranberries, raisins and blueberry compote served with your choice of honey yogurt or milk.

Whatever you order, save room for a mid-afternoon dessert as you head into the heart of the village of Essex, which together with the villages of Ivoryton and Centerbrook composes the town of Essex—a frequent entrant on lists celebrating the best small towns in America. Reason enough for inclusion is the Truffle Shots shop, where a mother-daughter team offers shot glasses full of non-alcoholic ganaches in 20 varieties; try dark chocolate mixed with flavors like fig balsamic, chipotle cinnamon, bourbon vanilla, mint or caramel. Walk it off by wandering Main Street, a road painted with a red-white-and-blue stripe that's framed by white picket fences, gardens of hydrangeas and historic homes, a place where antique cars seem more at home than their modern counterparts and the vibe hasn't changed much since Hepburn's heyday. ◆

SHEPARD
1 Shepard St., Cambridge
(617-714-5295
shepardcooks.com

SUSAN REGIS, CHEF AND CO-OWNER OF Cambridge's new Shepard, has been the lynchpin of a string of well-regarded restaurants, most recently UpStairs on the Square. Her partner, René Becker, owns the beloved nearby Hi-Rise Bread Company. Together, they have taken over the old Chez Henri space and focused on building a menu of seasonal New England ingredients with a lot of wood-fire roasting and grilling in a spare 70-seat room. Fans will be unsurprised to find the results of the team-up to be mostly fantastic.

A solid bar program kicks things off smoothly with classics like the pastel-purple Aviation ($11) of gin, maraschino liqueur, crème de violette and lemon. Becker's bakery background shows immediately in excellent complimentary sesame-seeded bread served with fine cultured butter on an oblong slate, and toasted, rough-textured Leslie's seeded rye ($5) dotted with dill flowers and more of that incredible butter. Big rye crackers provide an excellent foundation for a fruity spread of chamomile ricotta ($6) sprinkled with honey, herbs and sumac, and a pretty but inedibly leathery charred grape leaf. Fine Melba toast flanks another terrific spread of smoked bluefish pâté ($8) piquantly counterpointed with tiny pickled, sliced hot peppers. Shishito peppers ($9) get fire-roasted to droopy tenderness and showered with sunny shavings of slightly funky cured egg yolk.

Gorgeous platings are often matched by their flavors, as in tautog crudo ($11), a delectable, underused local species. Translucent slices are arrayed in painterly fashion on slate, streaked with a reduction of slow-roasted watermelon with the color and flavor of sweet sun-dried tomatoes and dotted with charred escarole leaves. Lamb ham ($10) makes a prosciutto-like salume out of lamb, wraps it around cubes of cantaloupe to balance its gamy funk and bedecks it with flower petals: attractive and witty. Basil pici ($16) builds on pretty, pale-green, al dente pasta with sweetly acidic, blistered cherry tomatoes, briny/funky striper bottarga and bitter rapini,

Regis and crew show real feeling for vegetables, arranging pristine local produce in delectable but not overwrought treatments. For instance, thin-sliced cucumbers ($7) let the sweet, crisp flavor of the vegetable shine through a light dressing of buttermilk, dill flowers and poppy seeds, while kale ($7) served in a cast-iron skillet perfectly balances accents of garlic and maple and adds leaf stems for textural interest. Larger plates show similar delicacy, as in leeks ($12) fire-charred to melting tenderness and served atop a velvety green romesco and dusty dehydrated tarragon. The wee Fairy Tale eggplant ($6), here preserved, sliced and dressed with a mild harissa, is a bit chewy and salty. Meanwhile, peak-of-summer tomatoes ($14) are a showstopper: big and small, vivid red, yellow and purple, exquisitely complemented by local feta, "heritage" popcorn (which sounds faintly ridiculous but delivers subtle corn kick and welcome crunch) and anise hyssop—simply gorgeous on both plate and palate.

Among larger plates, soupe de poisson ($28) breaks down the canonical Niçoise fisherman's stew into a plate of perfect littlenecks, some new potatoes, a collar and head of tautog, plenty of herbs and a shallow, scant puddle of thick seafood broth. It's a valiant attempt at a deconstruction of a classic that doesn't quite add up. By contrast, the humble bavette steak ($29), most often rendered locally as steak tips, is fantastic. Another beneficiary of skillfully applied wood fire, it's dressed with a subtle horseradish cream, flanked by crunchy leaves of horseradish, crisp and sweet hakurei turnips and a terrific pavé of new potatoes; it's about as good as a bistro steak gets.

The excellent desserts include a buckwheat waffle ($9), a chewy, faintly sour pancake made with a pizzelle iron and tented around fine hazelnut gelato, and brown butter cake ($10) with a tremendous meringuey chocolate mousse. Wines by the glass are nicely priced and well-chosen, like the 2014 Château de Roquefort Côtes de Provence rosé ($11), juicy and floral, the 2014 Domaine de Pajot Les Quatre Cépages Côtes de Gascogne ($8), offering emblematic sauvignon blanc notes of citrus and melon, and the 2013 Domaine de Piaugier La Grange de Piaugier Côtes du Rhone Sablet ($11), a spicy grenache/carignan blend with red-fruit depth and a subtle barnyard whiff.

Service is warm, knowledgeable and mostly polished, though the dining room's initial tag-team approach isn't always perfectly choreographed, improving once a single server takes command of the table. Removing the wall separating the bar and dining room, adding austere charcoal accents, blond woods and simple, sleek furnishings, and fronting the open kitchen with the roaring wood-fire grill has resulted in an airy, handsome, lively yet comfortable space. In it, Regis and Becker and their talented team are pulling off a bit of alchemy, combining great local ingredients with relatively straightforward, unflashy kitchen technique and routinely achieving sublimity. Put it in Shepard's unpretentious wrapper, and it's harder to think of a more winning formula for a long-running Cambridge neighborhood restaurant. ◆

Q: I AM BOTHERED BY MY DOUBLE CHIN; WHAT ARE MY OPTIONS TO GET RID OF IT?

A: There is a brand new, non-surgical option for permanently removing fat under your chin: Kybella. Recently approved by the FDA, Kybella is injected under the chin to dissolve stubborn fat. That fat is gone permanently, giving you a nicely contoured jawline once again.

Kybella is made from deoxycholic acid, which is a natural substance found in our bodies that aids in the breakdown of fat cells. When Kybella is injected, the fat cells are destroyed and those cells can no longer store or accumulate fat.

Whether you have a little fat under your chin or a lot, Kybella can be used to safely dissolve the fat away to give you the profile you have always wanted.

Z FOR ZACHARIAH ★★
Starring Margot Robbie, Chiwetel Ejiofor and Chris Pine. Written by Nissar Modi, based on the novel by Robert C. O'Brien. Directed by Craig Zobel. At West Newton, Hollywood Hits and On Demand

Movies / Brett Michel

S FOR SQUANDERED

A STRONG CAST AND A PROMISING PREMISE GET NUKED IN THIS NOVEL FAILURE.

A LONE FIGURE, COVERED HEAD-TO-TOE in a makeshift hazmat suit, walks silently through an abandoned country town that's somehow remained green despite the nuclear holocaust that has engulfed the planet. As this survivor removes a hooded mask, Z for Zachariah gives us our first glimpse at the naturally beautiful face and shoulder-length auburn hair of Ann Burden (Margot Robbie). Then, we discover that she's not completely alone. As is customary in the post-apocalyptic film genre, she's joined by a canine companion. Finished with a day of scavenging, this girl and her dog return to her picturesque farmhouse, where they dine by candlelight while relaxing to a vinyl record playing on an old hand-cranked phonograph.

Almost too quickly, Ann stumbles across another survivor near her home, this one wearing a real containment suit, struggling against the outfit's bulk while carting a small supply wagon behind him. This new world's getting crowded. Even Charlton Heston's Omega Man enjoyed at least a reel of quiet to reflect on his solitude, but only five minutes in, Ann finds herself confronting John Loomis (Chiwetel Ejiofor), demanding that the frightened and paranoid man lower the shaking pistol he has trained on her. Less concerned by the prospect of being shot than for the welfare of the man threatening to shoot her, she begs him to climb out of the stream he's bathing in. Although his Geiger counter had been giving him clean readings, prompting him to shed his sweat-filled "safe-suit" prototype, she informs him that contaminated water is flowing into the creek from a source outside this miraculously habitable valley.

From her accent, it's plain Ann's a Southerner, and since this is a movie, it's also a signifier that she's highly religious. John, who's revealed to be a man of science, must therefore be atheistic. Evidently genre conventions need to be satisfied as much as belief systems need to be tested.

Nissar Modi's screenplay retains the character names and milieu, but transforms Ann...

As John recovers from the radiation-induced vomiting that has left him a bedridden guest on Ann's farm, he hypothesizes that the valley it's nestled in has somehow produced a clean weather system, described as a "meteorological enclave" in Robert C. O'Brien's science-fiction novel for young adults, 1974's Z for Zachariah, a Jane Addams Children's Book Award winner told through the diary entries of a 16-year-old Ann. O'Brien's tale devoted a lot of ink to Ann's writings about farming for survival, but the book becomes a different kind of survival story, with Ann ultimately fleeing from the much older John, who is gradually revealed to be a murderous taskmaster prone to sexual assault.

Here, the novel serves only as a springboard. Nissar Modi's screenplay retains the character names and milieu, but transforms Ann into a survivor much closer in age to John, while the 25-year-old Robbie, a rising starlet whose looks are matched by her talent, plays her as the more sexually driven of the two. The overtly villainous aspects of John's character are jettisoned, allowing director Craig Zobel to take the plot in different directions.

Ann's still a damn good farmhand in this iteration, but she's limited by a severe lack of resources. She has a tractor, but no gas to run it; a generator, but no working engine to power it. Ever the scientist, John demonstrates how to pump petrol without electricity and formulates a plan to make good use of the irradiated water that sickened him, hoping to use it to fuel a hydroelectric generator—if he can convince Ann to let him dismantle the church her father built and repurpose the wood for the project.

Ann admits to John that she almost didn't survive the past winter due to hunger and cold; without the companionship of her dog, she might have given up. Now she finds herself energized not only by John's ideas, but by his very presence. Unlike in the novel, John is the one who resists Ann's advances, observing that it will "change things," adding, "We have time."

But do they? The next morning, the biggest departure from O'Brien's book arrives in the form of Caleb (Chris Pine), a blue-eyed Christian who, despite some scruffiness, looks far too buff and healthy to have wandered in from the nuclear wasteland. Race enters the picture too, and the focus on moral and religious quandaries shifts to a rather tepid love triangle that appears nowhere within O'Brien's blueprint.

In the end, the situation the characters face feels smaller than the cruel psychological experiment at the center of Zobel's previous film, 2012's claustrophobic Compliance, even though here the fate of the human race may hang in the balance. If jealous rivalries are all we have to offer, maybe we're better off not surviving. ◆

THE MILK CARTON KIDS play the Berklee Performance Center on Sept 8

Music / Paul Robicheau

TENDER TIGHTROPE

A FOLK-POP HARMONY DUO FINDS RESONANT BALANCE IN THEATER SETTINGS.

It's no wonder the Milk Carton Kids are thrilled to play the Berklee Performance Center for the first time in nearly four years—and their first time ever as a headliner—on Sept. 8. The acoustic duo always seemed better suited to theaters than a club environment.

"We're going to hand out flyers when people walk in, telling them they have to hold extremely still, even in their seats," deadpans Joey Ryan, adding that when he and Kenneth Pattengale played in clubs, "It became a common refrain of ours to admonish the crowd not to order any blended drinks during quiet songs."

The punchline, of course, is that the Milk Carton Kids only play quiet songs. The pair's hushed, delicately interwoven vocals and guitars cast a mesmerizing spell for fans who can absorb subtleties without distraction. And performances ring more clearly since the duo switched to using a single microphone, Ryan says.

So when the Milk Carton Kids graduated to theaters on their last tour, they decided to take advantage of those acoustically resonant halls to record the group's third album, Monterey, released in May. "It was Kenneth's idea—I think he was just hoodwinking me into taking a bus on tour," Ryan says from their LA hometown. "You drive through the night and show up in the morning, and then you have all day to record in the venue. I'm a little suspicious that was actually the impetus behind the plan."

Luckily, those spaces yielded haunting results on record, from the brittle picking of "Asheville Skies" to the breezy arc of "High Hopes" to the traditional folk flavor of "The City of Our Lady," where they sing, "Everywhere we go, we are the child of where we came." They recorded half of Monterey—the follow-up to the duo's Grammy-nominated The Ash & Clay—during 55 tour dates, before finishing with three additional days spent at Nashville's Downtown Presbyterian Church.

"There was never any pressure," Ryan says. "We didn't listen to our recordings from the entire tour until months later. The lack of self-examination in the midst of the process was incredibly liberating, especially to Kenneth as a guitar player. You can hear it very distinctly on this album, how freely he plays."

"We're going to hand out flyers when people walk in, telling them they have to hold extremely still, even in their seats."

Before they forged a partnership, Ryan and Pattengale spent a decade leading separate bands through the LA club circuit. "I would describe them as flailing, unsuccessful, unsatisfying and without audience," Ryan says of those years. "The Milk Carton Kids ended up somewhere halfway between what we were each doing. I've been influenced a lot more by a pretty structured rock or folk songwriting format, and Kenneth has traditionally rebelled against any sort of structure, often at the cost of having any sort of appeal. So we balance each other out."

Their sparse contrast served as a blueprint, evoking harmony duos such as Simon & Garfunkel, the Everly Brothers or Gillian Welch and David Rawlings.

"From the first day, it just sounded complete," says Ryan, who tunes his guitar to a lower register, while Pattengale plays lead with a handkerchief tied atop his neck to keep strings from buzzing. "The way we sang together was so gratifying, just to ourselves before anyone else ever heard it. It felt like a complete sonic palette, and we like the idea of committing to it and diving deeper into that particular framework rather than always scraping the surface of more instrumentation."

It's a setup that's not likely to change any time soon, although Ryan suggests "poll numbers are split 50-50" between people who wish to hear them with a band and those who want to keep the duo pure. Ryan says he likes how it gives Pattengale room to improvise on guitar. "I'd hate to think what would happen if there wasn't that space, and I love the way that our voices are exposed, because I think it makes us focus in on singing in a way that's incredibly intimate."

Ryan equates the process to walking a tightrope onstage. "Most people find our music soothing," he says. "I find it terrifying to perform, and exhilarating." ◆

GOING YARD

ONE MAN'S TRASH IS, APPARENTLY, THAT SAME MAN'S GOLD MINE.

When my sister-in-law, Elena, bought a new house down the street, she announced a concurrent culling of personal possessions. She'd move her stuff over to the new place, she said, but not all of that stuff would make it inside. It was time for a yard sale.

I've always viewed yard sales as a kooky exercise for people who feel they missed out on the barter economy. I mean, I'm no Downeast Dickerer, but both sides of the yard sale crowd seem mutually deluded. Sellers think their trash is a valuable commodity, and buyers are sure they'll find a Picasso among the piles of Tyler Perry DVDs.

Since we've also accumulated a fair amount of junk—valuables!—over the years, I load up a trailer to haul over to Elena's flea market. I'm pretty certain that this is a waste of time and I'll be hauling it all right back afterward. I've never stopped at a yard sale in my life, and I feel that in most respects my judgment is sound and represents that of the masses.

Apparently I'm in the minority when it comes to yard-sale enthusiasm, or lack thereof. When the signs go up, people begin arriving immediately—two days early. I guess pickers love a good jump, but it gets annoying. One woman stops by three times, including at 7 am the day of the sale. I'm over there unloading the trailer when she pulls in and asks if Elena has any jewelry for sale. Or iPhones. Or laptops. "You're killing me," Elena says. "I don't have any jewelry. Maybe at the next yard sale." The woman asks if Elena could call her about that hypothetical future sale. Elena says she doesn't want to take her number because she'll just lose it. "Oh, well then, can you text me?" replies Yard Crasher. Elena explains that texting is the same as calling in terms of the losing-the-number problem, so no. That seems to satisfy the jewelry hound, and she drives off, never to return. Apparently her excitement lay entirely in showing up too early. She probably left to stake out a good spot for Black Friday.

She isn't alone in her strategy. Although Junkfest '15 is slated to officially begin at 10 am, by 8:30 there's a healthy crowd. We resign ourselves to the fact that it's on. Our stash includes a turkey fryer, a mini fridge, a rickety glider chair and assorted random garage detritus. A kindly octogenarian emerges from his Subaru Baja and grabs a set of mountain bike tires. "What size are these?" he asks. "I've never seen this size before." I reply that they're 26-inch tires, pretty standard for most bikes in the known universe. He's trying to soften me up, driving down the price by implying that my tires are some strange dimension, metric maybe—perhaps he'd have to have them altered by the tire tailor. What I know, and he does not, is that I don't care even a little bit about these tires or how much I get for them. I'd be happy enough just to get them out of my garage and onto whatever penny-farthing this guy thinks they'd fit. "How about a dollar?" I propose. Sold.

It will not be the last item on the dollar menu. Elena's boyfriend, Louis, is sitting near the garage when a guy walks out with a broom and a toilet plunger. "How much for these?" he asks. Neither item is actually for sale, but Louis calls an audible and sells them for a buck each. After that, though, he starts writing Post-its denoting the items that are not for sale—a fan, a table, the dog.

Buyers are sure they'll find a Picasso among the piles of Tyler Perry DVDs.

Most shoppers make off with an item or two, but a select few quickly identify themselves as the whales, people willing to spend $200 or more on curios and tchotchkes. One woman fills a minivan with $250 in Christmas paraphernalia. Another guy makes multiple visits during the course of the morning. He's obviously a yard-sale regular, versed in the art of the haggle. He looks like David Koechner—Champ Kind from Anchorman.

"Well, this guitar has a broken string. I don't know how I'd fix that," he says with a tone of sad resignation more appropriate to an astronaut staring at a broken carbon-scrubber on the International Space Station. Heather tells him he'll fix it by getting a new string. She refuses to budge on the price. He grudgingly hands over $30 and immediately tries to sell the guitar to someone else in the driveway. He also buys my mini-fridge and the turkey fryer. Turkey fryers are a great way to cook delicious turkey while spending $100 on oil and possibly burning down your yard. As he'll learn.

By the end of the day, most of our stuff is gone and we've made $339. I was wrong. People love yard sales. Next time, I'll bring the toilet plungers. ◆

BREAKOUT ROLES

THE OITNB AND JANE THE VIRGIN ACTRESS SOUNDS OFF ON SINGING, SWEARING AND HER DREAM PROJECTS.

DIANE GUERRERO, 29, PLAYS INMATE MARITZA Ramos on Orange Is the New Black and Jane's best friend Lina on Jane the Virgin. Born in New Jersey and raised in Boston, she attended the Boston Arts Academy, where she studied voice. She received a bachelor's degree in political science and communications at Regis College, but she soon moved to New York to pursue her passion for the arts. She has appeared on Person of Interest, Blue Bloods and Taxi Brooklyn and in Are We There Yet?, and she will appear in the upcoming features Peter and John and Happy Yummy Chicken. In the spring, she will publish a memoir drawing on her experience as the daughter of Colombian immigrants, who were deported when she was 14. She lives in New York.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Give me one reason I should read your book.
DIANE GUERRERO: Well, so far people have only heard the rough outline of my story, and they don't know the full details of what I went through. Anyone who doesn't realize how poor our immigration system is can learn a lot from it.

Do you consider yourself a singer first and foremost? I consider myself an artist. I'm a singer and an actor and a writer, and who knows—maybe someday I'll be a dancer or do something else creative.

Song you sing most often in the shower? Either "I Loves You, Porgy" or "September Song."

Soundtrack of your life? I'm going to go with ABBA's greatest hits, the gold album.

Favorite telenovela? I don't really watch them anymore, but growing up, I was super into La Usurpadora, which basically means "The Usurper." It was about this really rich, evil woman who goes to a restaurant where the very poor bathroom attendant turns out to look exactly like her. It was very dramatic. The rich woman has this wonderful husband, and she wants to escape from him, so she hires or blackmails this poor girl into posing as her. I was obsessed.

Worst telenovela title? There are a lot, but I guess the worst would be Sin Senos No Hay Paraíso, which translates as "Without Breasts There Is No Paradise."

Doesn't Jane the Virgin have so many farfetched coincidences that it's totally implausible? I don't think so. Truth is stranger than fiction. Anything can happen, even if it only happens in our hearts or heads.

What would you do if you were accidentally artificially inseminated? At this point in my life, I'd probably keep it, but if I were as young as Jane was, with no husband and a complicated situation, I might consult with Planned Parenthood. Every woman will tell you that you have to be in that position to really know how you feel. So it could go either way.

So when you're on a show and your credit is as a "recurring character," are you constantly trying to change that? Yeah. As an artist, I'm always trying to improve my position. I have a fantastic gig with Orange Is the New Black, but I'm going to evolve, and I want to find more work.

Do you worry about being typecast? I used to worry about it a lot. But every time that I get a little fearful about it, I remind myself that I'm in control of my career, and I have the final say on what projects I do.

Latina actress you idolized growing up? Oh, all of them. Salma Hayek, Penelope Cruz, Rosie Perez, Zoe Saldana...anyone who represented us. I commend them for their work, and I aspire to be like them.

Favorite Spanish swear word? Mierda, which means shit. It also happens to be my favorite swear in English.

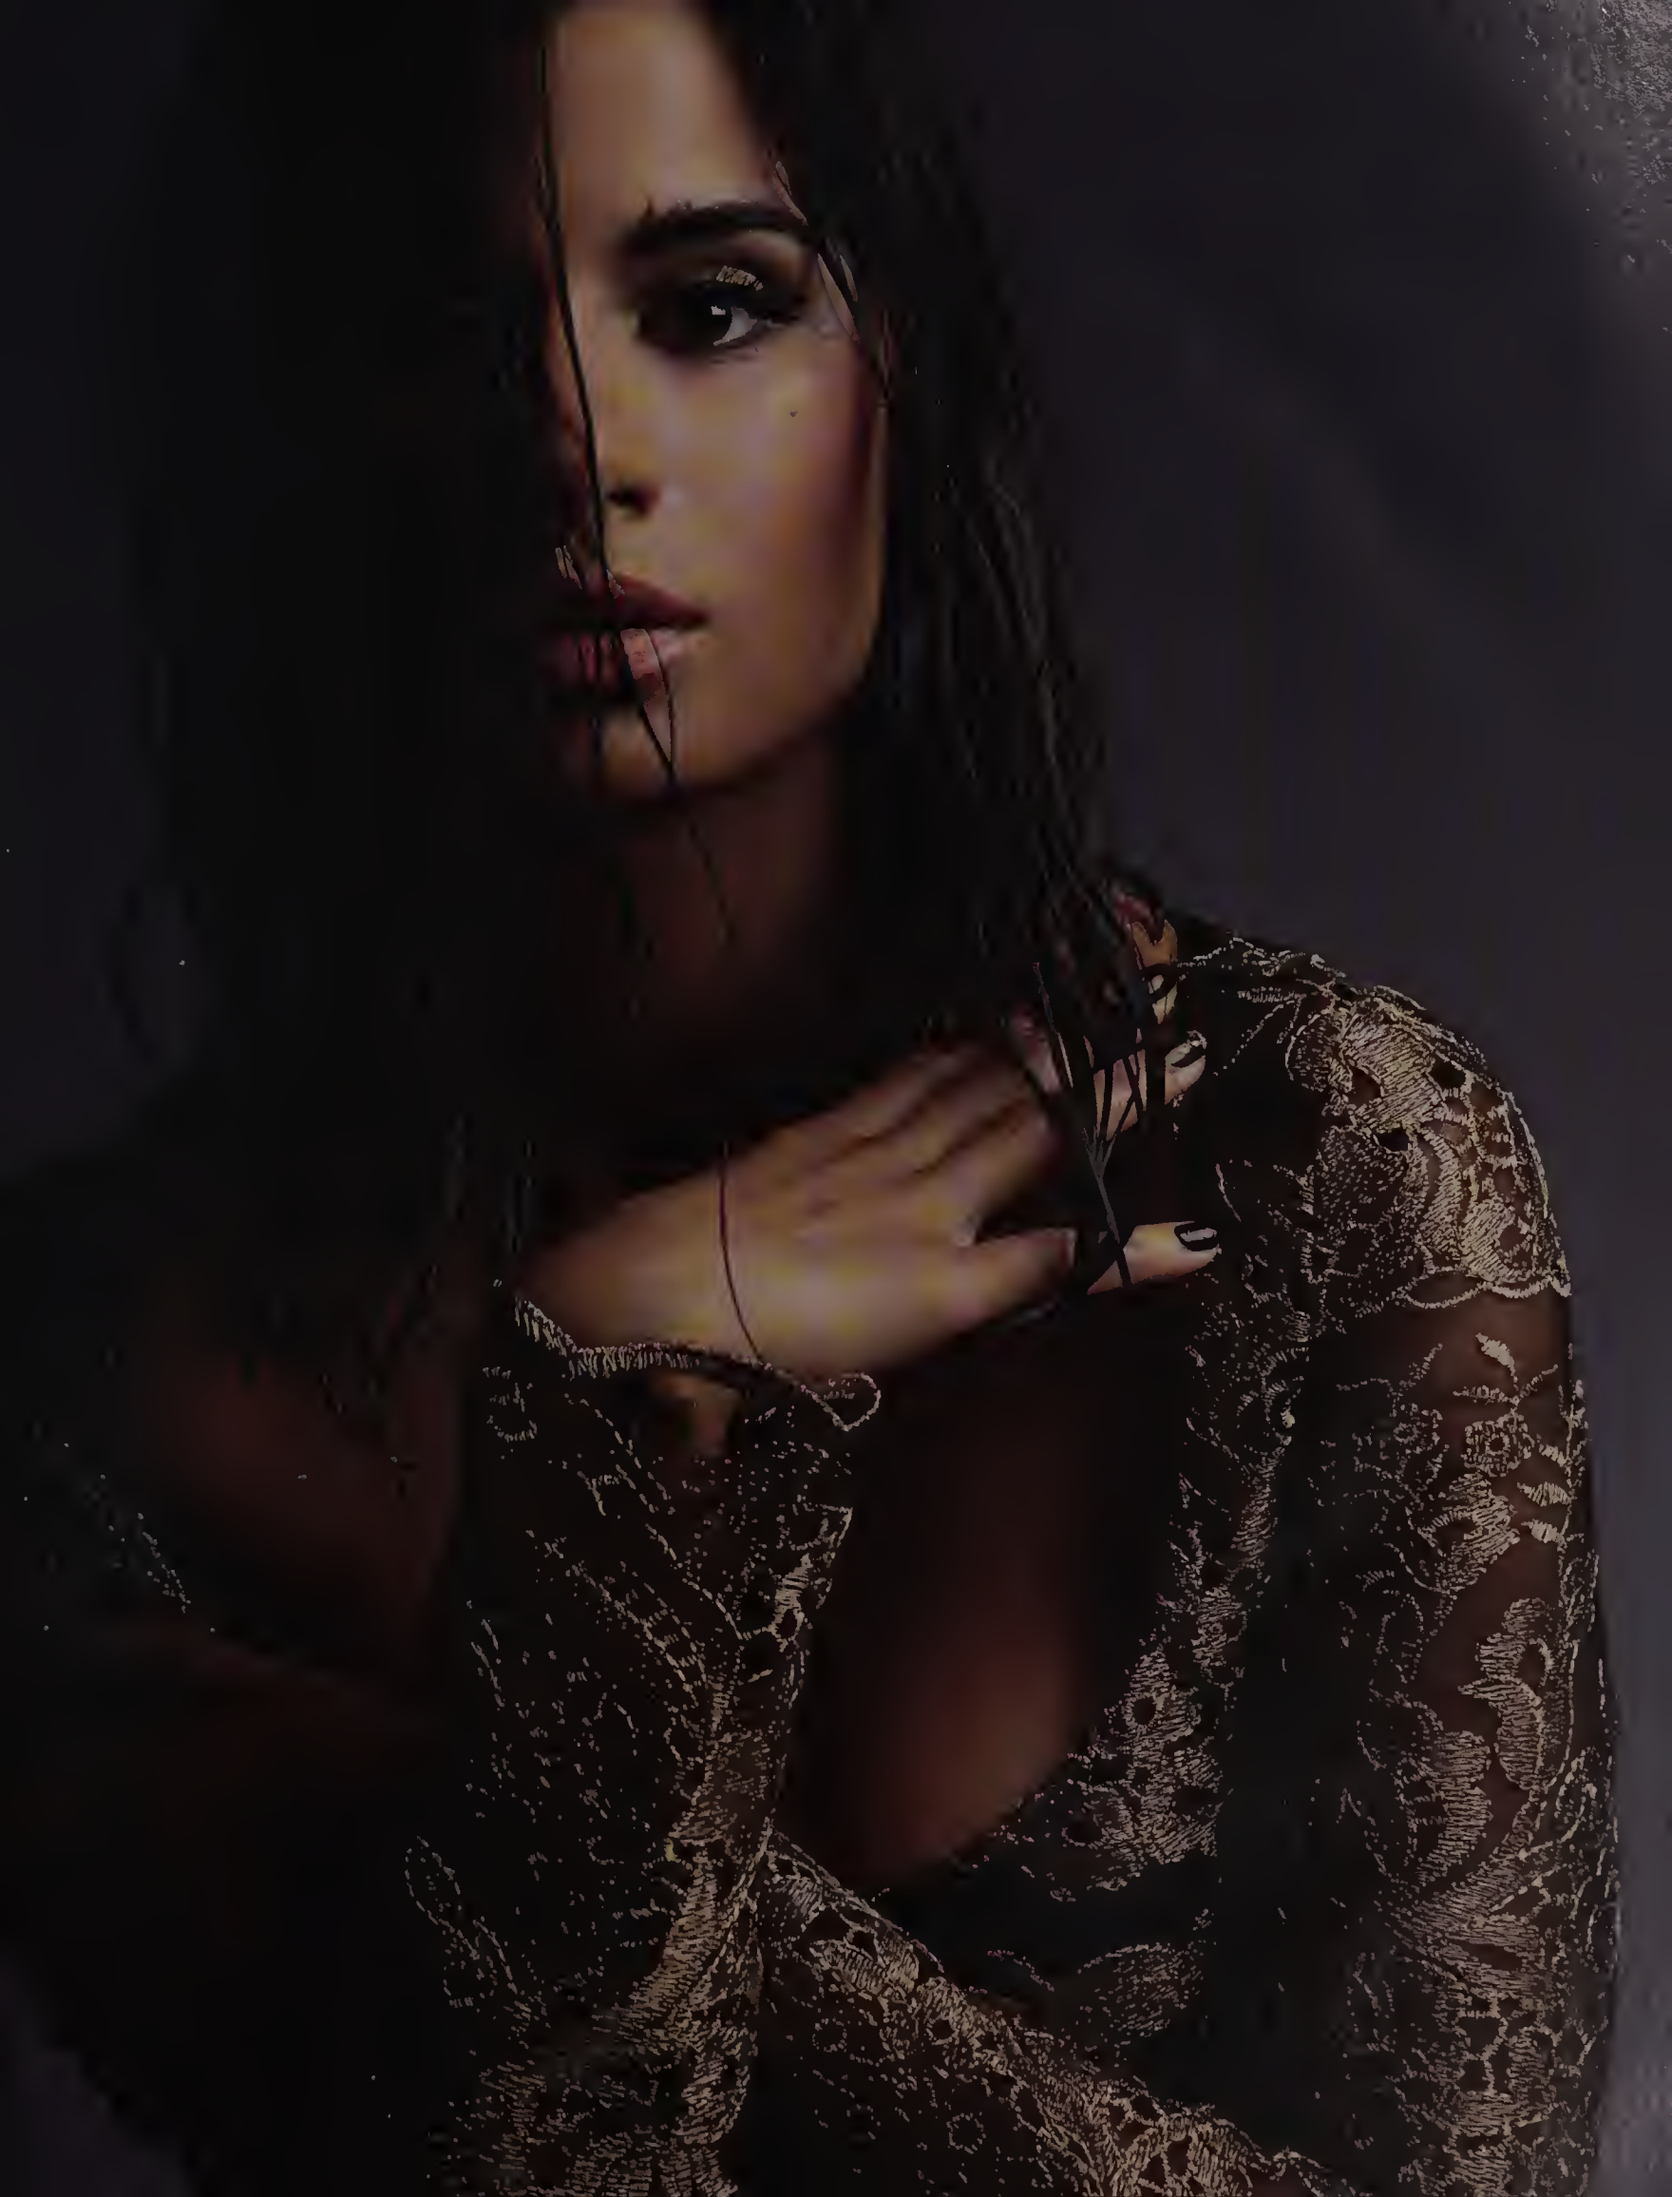
Are Colombian women the source of the legend of fierce Amazons? Oh, yeah. Colombian women are fierce. We grab life by the horns. We're go-getters. This is what I see in my mother, my grandmother, my aunts. We all have a lot of passion and fight for what we believe in. There's this stereotype of Latino culture that the men are very macho and the women are all submissive, but it's not true of Colombians. We are taught to stand up for ourselves and be proud of who we are.

"Colombian women are fierce. We grab life by the horns. We're go-getters. This is what I see in my mother, my grandmother..."

Would you be offended if I called you a fiery Latina? No. I am fiery, period. I'm seriously fiery. Like, you need a glass of water after meeting me.

Popular phrase that most offends you? When people say, "I'm blessed." I'm like, "Who are you that the supreme being singled you out?" It just sounds so presumptuous and arrogant to me, and from my perspective, I have to point out that your geographical location has a lot to do with how "blessed" you are.

What's the recipe for Happy Yummy Chicken? Campy, laugh-out-loud fun. It's a mockumentary about an actual event that happened in China, I believe. It's just absolute ridiculousness, and I got to work with my friends, which was great, and I got to exercise my comedic muscles.



Biggest beauty secret? When I start feeling gross, I drink gallons and gallons of water.

Workout regimen? At the moment, it's my hand in a bag of chips, which is terrible. But I walk everywhere, and I'm very active. When I go to the gym, I like to run.

Dream role? Anything where I would play a science-fiction or mythical character. I'm dying to play a part that has to do with fantasy.

Is there one person you most want to work with? Can I say four? And these are directors: Spike Lee, Pedro Almodóvar, Wes Anderson and Tim Burton.

At what point will you feel secure? I guess when I'm secure. [Laughs.] I just think it takes time. There have been a lot of ups and downs in my life, and I'm not there yet, but I think as I mature and live a little more, maybe have my first child, I'll start feeling secure. ◆

METRO BOSTON'S ECLECTIC GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND CRESCENDOS

AGENDA for 9/2–9/15

Song Cycle

A music fest comes out in the wash.

AS LEGEND HAS IT, the JP Music Festival was born in a Jamaica Plain laundromat, where two of its six founders idly wondered why their 'hood—a haven for creative talent—didn't have its own music festival while they folded socks. At least that's how it went down according to a promo video released in advance of this year's fifth annual free outdoor fest. It features a solid lineup of more than 20 acts based or bred in JP, including quirky garage rockers Streight Angular, bluesy Americana outfit Cask Mouse, powdered-wigged hard rockers the Upper Crust and many more. Head to Pinebank Field on Sept. 12 for a day of free tunes and Plain good vibes. Alexandra Cavallo

FUNNY PEOPLE

Fans who were bummed when Fox canceled Mulaney can catch the title star, comedian John Mulaney, when Funny or Die's Oddball Comedy and Curiosity Festival stops in town. Known for his sharp observational humor, the young comic—who spent six seasons as a writer for Saturday Night Live—joins a stacked lineup of very funny people for the stand-up comedy fest, including fellow Kroll Show star and creator Nick Kroll, roastmaster extraordinaire Jeff Ross, Dave Attell, Nikki Glaser and more. The traveling laugh factory, headlined by Parks and Rec favorite Aziz Ansari and Trainwreck star Amy Schumer, rolls into the Xfinity Center on Sept. 11. / Alexandra Cavallo

BOYS OF SUMMER Childhood adventures are a rite of passage, but chances are your trip to the neighborhood's "haunted" house was a bit tamer than running from a family of mobsters while hunting for One-Eyed Willy's treasure-filled pirate ship. Thirty years ago, The Goonies set the standard for goofy adventure comedies, complete with Baby Ruths, puppy love and justification for those dreaded piano lessons, and launched the careers of Josh Brolin, Sean Astin and Corey Feldman. Goonies never say die, so truffle shuffle to the Coolidge Corner Theatre on Sept. 4 and 5 for midnight screenings. / Andrew Bourque

Amy ★★★1/2 I didn't know much about the late Amy Winehouse's music before watching this heartbreaking documentary from Asif Kapadia, but I was mourning her by the end. Kapadia's last picture was the 2010 doc Senna, about another talent who died too soon, Brazilian F1 driver Ayrton Senna. But it seems that was just the qualifying lap for this devastating portrait of the soulful singer who died from alcohol poisoning nearly four years ago at the age of 27. Given how much of a punch line Winehouse had become because of her public drunkenness (an infamous outdoor music festival in Serbia where she was too intoxicated to sing is shown here to powerful effect), I was one of many who wasn't surprised by her death. But Kapadia has vindicated her tremendously, compiling warts-and-all footage—much of it shot on camcorders and cellphones by some of her closest friends and enablers—that begins when she was a 14-year-old Jewish girl in North London. The first footage we see was shot at a birthday party, where we hear her gorgeous voice. "Life is short," Amy says on camera at one point. Indeed, tragically. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Ant-Man ★★★ With nearly every superhero movie climaxing with gigantic things crashing into other things, it's a tiny thrill to see the climactic sequence of Marvel's latest take place within a little girl's bedroom. Then again, when you're a hero who shrinks to the size of an ant, even a Thomas the Tank Engine toy seems imposing when barreling toward you. But cut to a wider view of the action, as director Peyton Reed does, and the small scale begets big laughs, another welcome wrinkle in the spandex-suit genre. It's doubtful Ant-Man will be as lucrative as Marvel's last big gamble, Guardians of the Galaxy, but it offers a fair amount of modest pleasures, beginning with the cast. Paul Rudd stars as Scott Lang, a small-time thief with a Robin Hood ethos. Recruited by septuagenarian scientist Hank Pym (Michael Douglas, remarkably de-aged during a 1989-set prologue), who supplies him with his suit and tech, Lang is Marvel's first blue-collar hero. He's also granted a refreshingly unexpected sidekick: Michael Peña's ex-con Luis, who almost steals the movie with his hilarious digressions. "Ant-Man will return," promises a tag after a second end-credit scene. Here's hoping they don't make him any bigger. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Fantastic Four ★ In this third attempt at launching a Fantastic Four film franchise, director Josh Trank cast Michael B. Jordan, the talented young black actor who costarred in his low-budget debut film, 2012's Chronicle, to portray Johnny Storm, upsetting some comic fans who were used to a blond-haired, blue-eyed Human Torch. But Jordan proves an inspired choice, as do Kate Mara as Johnny's sister Sue (the Invisible Woman), Jamie Bell as Ben Grimm (the boulder-skinned Thing) and Miles Teller, Jordan's That Awkward Moment costar, as Reed Richards (Mr. Fantastic), the group's paternal leader. But here's the thing: Reed's not a patriarchal figure in this retelling, which adopts The Dark Knight's brooding, ostensibly real-world vibe. In this needlessly modern update, there's little room for family, since all of the characters are teenagers. We never see them learn to harness their powers—or even interact with one another until the less-than-fantastic final act, when Reed is convinced to resume work on an interdimensional teleporter that's done nothing but cause harm. "They made it ugly," he observes, taking in what's happened to the device responsible for creating this version of the Fantastic Four. They sure did. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Gift ★★★1/2 Simon (Jason Bateman) and Robyn (Rebecca Hall) move to his hometown of Los Angeles, where they hope to start a family in their spacious new home. A chance encounter with one of Simon's high school classmates becomes just the first of many, as "Gordo the weirdo" (Joel Edgerton) inserts himself into the married couple's lives. When he increasingly shows up on their doorstep, Robyn begins to take a liking to the oddball, but Simon won't have it. Clearly, there's a history between Simon and Gordo, and as Robyn pieces together the details of the two's past relationship, an unsettling truth begins to emerge. Edgerton demonstrates a deft hand at manipulating audience expectations in his writing and directing debut. The 41-year-old Aussie, who has built a strong acting resume during the past two decades, proves that he's just as strong behind the camera, and that's no surprise since he's worked for Ridley Scott (Exodus: God and Kings) and Kathryn Bigelow (Zero Dark Thirty). The result is one of the year's better psychological thrillers. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Irrational Man ★★ Cinematographer Darius Khondji, shooting his fifth Woody Allen film, their third in a widescreen format, beautifully captures Rhode Island and Salve Regina University (standing in for the fictional Braylin College), which is a nice way of saying that the movie isn't very good. Allen's latest—his 45th—is a third-rate rehash of his 1989 masterpiece, Crimes and Misdemeanors, a chilling ode to Dostoyevsky that he'd already recycled in Match Point and Cassandra's Dream, both better pictures than this. It also features Allen's umpteenth May-September romance, with Jill Pollard (Emma Stone, appearing in her second Allen film), a student taking an "ethical strategies" class who falls for her teacher, Abe Lucas (Joaquin Phoenix), a rock-star philosopher who has everyone at Braylin talking. Why remains unclear, as this is Phoenix at his most laid-back. Which isn't to say he's bad; both Phoenix and Stone are fully committed—but to a script that feels like a first draft, one that saddles them with voiceover duties requiring them to redundantly narrate the action we're watching. The film's redundant enough. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Learning to Drive ★★1/2 Patricia Clarkson is a treasure, but like most actresses of a certain age in Hollywood, she's in need of better scripts. Not that Isabel Coixet's comedy/drama is a bad film—it's better than most pictures that have opened in the past month—but its story of a middle-aged Manhattan book critic taking lessons from a Sikh instructor drives down a very predictable path. Clarkson is Wendy, whose husband of 21 years (Jake Weber) has just left her. Deciding to spend more time with her daughter Tasha (Grace Gummer) in Vermont, Wendy must get a car, but first she needs a license, which is where the lessons with Darwan (Ben Kingsley) come in. He's a cabbie, an American citizen originally from India, and he's being pushed into an arranged marriage. Sarah Kernochan's stagey script is all very sitcomy, but Clarkson and Kingsley (who appeared together in Coixet's Elegy back in 2008) make the situations go down easy as the two help each other to get back on the sometimes-bumpy road of life. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

The Man from U.N.C.L.E. ★★★ The unexpected year of the espionage movie continues with director Guy Ritchie's big-screen reimagining of this 1964-68 TV series. Breezier than the recent Mission: Impossible – Rogue Nation, this prequel set in the early '60s suffers slightly by comparison, but it's still quite a bit of fun. Ritchie and co-screenwriter Lionel Wigram (his collaborator on the Robert Downey Jr. Sherlock Holmes films) enjoy paying homage to James Bond just as much as Matthew Vaughn did with Kingsman: The Secret Service and Paul Feig did with Spy. The tone is nearly as comical as those two pictures, while the style is pure Ritchie. Equal-opportunity casting finds Brit Henry Cavill (Man of Steel) starring as American CIA operative Napoleon Solo, while American Armie Hammer (The Lone Ranger) plays slap-prone KGB agent Illya Kuryakin. The two put aside cold-war hostilities (if not tensions) to team up in this surprisingly low-tech thriller, picking up a rocket scientist's daughter (Alicia Vikander) in their mission to stop—you guessed it—an international criminal organization. Spectre, the upcoming, dour-looking Bond picture, could probably spy some tips on how to lighten up from these entertaining men from U.N.C.L.E. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Mission: Impossible – Rogue Nation ★★★1/2 How does Tom Cruise's Ethan Hunt outrun so many bullets? One of the many pleasures of Christopher McQuarrie's spy film focusing on the exploits of Hunt and his team, the Impossible Missions Force, is that he doesn't. In this fifth installment of a 19-year-old series that keeps getting better with age, Ethan takes at least one in the gut, reminding you that while he may be great at his job, he's even better when things don't go according to plan. None of the exploits of the IMF look easy, and the fact that 53-year-old Cruise is finally starting to show (and ever-so-slightly play) his age only makes his insane physical feats that much more thrilling to watch. The crazy suits him. And it doesn't get much crazier than the sight of Cruise clinging onto the outside of a flying plane, a stunt that has been at the center of this film's marketing campaign. But the biggest surprise? This is just the curtain-raiser, occurring during the first 10 minutes. The movie's plot involves a rogue anti-IMF organization known as the Syndicate, but their mission is foolish. Why deprive audiences of what's become the best action franchise out there? (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Mistress America ★★★ This film enjoyed the best advance buzz of the two pictures that Noah Baumbach directed this year (While We're Young opened last spring), but viewers' mileage may vary. He reunites with his offscreen partner, Greta Gerwig, who cowrites and costars, but the two had better success with their first big collaboration, 2012's Frances Ha, which followed a post-grad drifting through New York. This time, Gerwig cedes center stage to lonely college freshman Tracy (Lola Kirke), whose university experience isn't taking shape as she'd imagined. The guy she likes in her writing class (Matthew Shear) started dating someone else after he and Tracy began hanging out, which is just another day in Manhattan for her. However, her disappointment dissipates when she falls under the wing of her soon-to-be stepsister, Brooke (Gerwig), who's as much a dreamer as Frances—but even more of a mess. In short, Brooke's a great model for the fiction that Tracy's writing. The life lessons are backed by Britta Phillips' and Dean Wareham's synth-heavy score, which would have fit right in with Baumbach's 1995 debut, Kicking and Screaming, another film set among college intellectuals. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

THAT'S A RAP F. Gary Gray's Straight Outta Compton chronicles the origin story of seminal LA hip-hop collective N.W.A.

Southpaw ★★1/2 Last year, Jake Gyllenhaal delivered a knockout performance in Nightcrawler, which found him dropping 30 pounds, causing his eyes to pop from his gaunt, haunted face. It was a wonderfully wormy performance, and it was snubbed during Oscar season. In director Antoine Fuqua's latest, Gyllenhaal performs literal knockouts, bulking up to portray anger-prone boxer Billy "The Great" Hope, who's been with his wife, Maureen (Rachel McAdams), since they met at an orphanage. Now, they live in luxury, along with their bright young daughter, Leila (newcomer Oona Laurence). Alas, tragedy strikes as Maureen is caught in the crossfire during an altercation between Billy and a showboating boxer (Miguel Gómez). Billy loses everything: his wife, his money, his home—and his daughter, who's taken by family services. But since the movie is structured as Billy's redemption tale, the gifted Laurence is little more than a prop in a rote script that pushes Gyllenhaal's prize performance against the ropes. Fuqua, who brought out the darkness in Denzel Washington when he directed the actor toward an Oscar in Training Day, does the same with Gyllenhaal. Alas, the foundation behind Billy's Light Heavyweight Champ is far more lightweight than heavy. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Straight Outta Compton ★★★ F. Gary Gray's film has been burning up the box office, and why not? His chronicle of the five young men who rose above their upbringing in Compton, California, begins in 1987, but it captures the zeitgeist of the Black Lives Matter movement: The police who constantly drive through the frame, threatening to keep our young black heroes in their place, serves to remind us that as much as some things change, most things painfully remain the same. The cast is uniformly terrific in this portrayal of the risc of subversive "gangsta rap" group N.W.A.—made up of Ice Cube (O'Shea Jackson Jr., the real Ice Cube's son), Dr. Dre (Corey Hawkins), Eazy-E (Jason Mitchell), DJ Yella (Neil Brown Jr.) and MC Ren (Aldis Hodge)—who stand up to authority by creating angry anthems such as "Fuck tha Police," which Gray (Ice Cube's director in 1995's Friday) and his writers stage here as a direct response to the group nearly being arrested outside their recording studio simply for being black in the wrong place. Sure, the movie is hagiographic and overstuffed, but like the group, it's electric and not easily silenced. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

RAINWRECK ★★1/2 TV sensation Amy Schumer brings her caustic humor to the big screen in director Judd Apatow's latest, and while she wrote the script, it suffers from most of the same detriments as Apatow's films, which include The 40-Year-Old Virgin and Knocked Up. It's overlong and indulgent, and although it mines laughs from the abhorrent behavior it seems to be celebrating, it ultimately sides with a very conservative view of the world. If you're a viewer of Schumer's sketch-based Comedy Central show, you can imagine that this creative marriage might go sour—and you'd be right. The movie opens in 1993, when Gordon Townsend (Colin Quinn), who's being kicked out by his wife, drills a mantra into his 5- and 9-year-old daughters: "Monogamy isn't realistic." Cut to the present, where Amy (Schumer), the older of the two girls, has embraced her father's teachings, enjoying her uninhibited and commitment-free lifestyle while teasing her younger sister (Brie Larson), who's embraced a traditional marriage. But then, she meets a successful sports doctor (Bill Hader, who's developing a nice post-SNL movie career), and predictable conventionality takes over. No doubt, Schumer's a star, but she's stuck here playing what she typically mocks. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

VE ARE YOUR FRIENDS ★ This itty-bitty I Vitelloni also takes its cue from Saturday Night Fever, but the navel-gazing nightlife among friends Cole (Zac Efron), Mason (Jonny Weston), Ollie (Shiloh Fernandez) and Squirrel (Alex Shaffer) moves from the dance clubs of Brooklyn to the nightclubs and outdoor music fests of Hollywood, where casual drug use is presented without comment. The digital rotoscope animation used to represent the effects of PCP may be one of the worst onscreen representations of a trip that I've ever witnessed, although it's no less false than casting Efron to represent the face of the EDM scene. "All you need is a laptop, a little bit of talent and one song," Cole says near the beginning of this debut feature from Max Joseph (an actor/producer from Catfish: The TV Show). Then the 23-year-old wannabe DJ demonstrates that there's actually no talent required as he's taken under the wing of James (beardo Wes Bentley), a burnt-out hack whose gorgeous younger girlfriend Sophie ("Blurred Lines" model Emily Ratajkowski) will soon fall for our hero, souring the teacher/mentor relationship. If that sounds like a spoiler to you, you deserve this movie. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and Somerville.)

DREAM CATCHERS

Miranda and Elektra Kilbey of dream-pop group Say Lou Lou are proof that the apple doesn't fall far from the tree—even if the trees are rooted thousands of miles apart. Growing up, the twins split their time between Stockholm with their mother, a guitarist in the punk band Pink Champagne, and Sydney with their father, the frontman of influential '80s new wave outfit the Church. Perhaps it's these family ties that influenced April's Lucid Dreaming, the duo's debut album that sparkles with ethereal vocals and atmospheric synths. MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

BAR NUN Drivers on the Southeast Expressway have long eaught a flash of Corita Kent's work in the "rainbow swash" painted on a Dorehester storage tank. But beginning Sept. 3, Harvard Art Museums visitors ean get a eloser look at her art at Corita Kent and the Language of Pop. The nun, aetivist and edueator onee held more than 150 solo shows in one year while involved in anti-war and eivil rights movements. Faeed with Chureh disapproval, she kieked the habit and made her way to Boston, designing that rainbow swash and silksereen prints inspired by seripture, Beatles lyries, ads and even fellow Catholie Andy Warhol—whose work will be on view next to that of Kent and other pop-art ieons through Jan. 3. / Sarah Hagman PRESIDENT + FELLOWS OF HARVARD COLLEGE

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

THE PARTY'S NOT OVER TILL THE FAT LADY SINGS

Opera might not be the first thing that leaps to mind when someone mentions Martha's Vineyard, but the Featherstone Center for the Arts honored island resident Judy Belushi Pisano with a fund-raiser featuring Wendy Taucher's hilariously off-kilter take on the art form, Impresario Now!

Guests sipped a superb Californian chardonnay and kibbitzed before taking their seats for a performance that was nearly as clever as Bugs Bunny's "Kill Da Wabbit!" cartoon. Present and accounted for: the incorrigible Linda Comstock, blue-blooded shutterbug Felicia Murray, exotic equestrienne Francesca Kelly (of Vineyard Haven and Rajasthan), arts booster Bonnie Berger, the island's poet laureate, Arnie Reisman, and his stunning other half, Paula Lyons, force of nature Jacqui Budd, debonair retiree Sherif Nada and the ethereal Mary, party pair Bob and Mary Cranc, theater patron Gerry Yukevich, the incomparably chic Susan Copen Oken, film producer Mary Chiochios, and a pair of copulating dragonflies who enjoyed themselves immensely.

After the performance, a delicious buffet dinner was served beneath a tent, where the following was overheard: "I'm leaving the day before the president arrives. That's not a coincidence."

In fact, there was much talk of the first family descending on the island (and how to avoid their entourage and the crowds they attract). But the evening's funniest exchange came when one guest asked a woman why her husband wasn't there. "Are you kidding?" she said. "It takes the jaws of life to pry him off the beach."

TRUER WORDS

William Congreve was right when he wrote, "Music has charms to soothe a savage breast," which is basically the premise behind the Boston Landmarks Orchestra's Charles Ansbacher Music for All Award.

Named for the organization's founder, the award honors individuals who have fostered reconciliation through classical music, and it was bestowed on Arab-Israeli musician Nabeel Abboud-Ashkar, the founder of the Polyphony Foundation—a group that facilitates dialogue between Palestinians and Jews through classical music. Presenting the award was the late Ansbacher's wife, former ambassador to Austria, human rights activist and iconoclastic Texas heiress Swanee Hunt, whose chef (the delightfully blue-haired Matthew Pidge) prepared a sumptuous picnic that was served on the lawn in front of the Hatch Memorial Shell.

Among the high-powered crowd on hand: éminence grise Graham Gund, mustachioed muchacho Jonathan Warburg, Boston Foundation head honcho Paul Grogan, board member Elyse Cherry, board chair Jeff Makholm, the unsinkable Mary Kakas, state Rep. Adrian Madaro, Ansbacher's brother, Ted, and his wife, Barbara, tall drink of water Bill Nigreen and fashion historian Kathleen McDermott, WCRB-FM (99.5) afternoon host Chris Voss, gorgeous grad student Iman Abdul-Musawwir, her comrade in arms, Tyler Miller, and one person (namely yours truly) who suggested that the easiest solution to the Arab/Israeli conflict would be to give Florida to the Palestinians (this was met with mixed reactions).

The free concert that followed, Sheherazade Meets Clarice Assad, included a world premiere by brilliant Brazilian composer Clarice Assad, along with pieces by Ravel and Rimsky-Korsakov, and the audience went home pleased.

The evening's funniest remark, meanwhile, happened when someone told the following joke: "A gluten-free, vegan CrossFitter walks into a bar. What does he brag about first?" ◆

ARTISTIC LICENSE

IN THIS ISSUE, JONATHAN SOROFF catches up with our cover subject, Charlestown-raised actor Jonathan Tucker, who tells us not just tales from Hollywood, but how art helped him with the ladies while he was in high school. Of course, even if you're already set in the romance department, there are lots of other good reasons to avail yourself of the amazing arts season ahead—like, say, a performance artist working her magic for museumgoers for six hours a day, every day, for three straight months. Or a performance by a pianist who sticks screws, paperclips and sundry other strange objects into her instrument. Or a rarely seen ballet with a massive cast of 70 dancers and more than 100 musicians, some spilling over into opera boxes. These are just a few of the weird and wonderful happenings you'll find in our fall arts preview, jam-packed with killer theater, comedy, literary happenings and much more. Elsewhere, Sarah Hagman hosts a roundtable of locals shaking up the classical music scene, and Meghan Kavanaugh takes a closer look at new public art, offering even more reasons to get out and about this fall. Happy adventuring.

FINE ART FOR ALL

A LOOK AT NEW PUBLIC ART POPPING UP IN TOWN

STATE OF THE ART

NOTHING AGAINST BRONZE sculptures, but Boston's latest public art projects feel a little less, well, stiff. From the temporary—Janet Echelman's urban web As If It Were Already Here and the Lawn on D's D Street ArtLAB are both on view until October—to the longer-term, like Kyu Seok Oh's Wandering Sheep (p. 15), the first piece in a 12-year series that will debut a new Chinese zodiac animal with the changing of the calendar, the city is celebrating a wide range of contemporary art. Walls are canvases for the Mayor's Mural project and for Lawrence Weiner, whose A Translation from One Language to Another will be installed in Dewey Square this month, while empty lots become interactive wonderlands with help from the Department of Play collaborative. Add in the transportation-focused works planned for South Station, along with these three fall installations, and it's clear this is a medium on the move. / Meghan Kavanaugh

WORK IN PROGRESS: Sara Egan's mosaic in the making at her Cambridge studio

STRING THING: A rendering of Jacob Kulin's sculpture

PARCEL 24 by Sara Egan
Composed of 31 panels, the 40-by-8-foot plaster mosaic was installed this month at the entrance of One Greenway.
On her inspiration: "When I made that particular painting, I wanted to do something with a different tempo, something that borders on chaos," Egan says.
On the function of public art: "When you are driving along the road next to the Greenway and you look up and see Janet Echelman's colored web of ropes, it creates a kind of revelatory feeling, an expansive feeling. It's like when you go to the ballet and see a dancer leap or do an impossible twirl. There is a thrill to it. That kind of inspiration is important to us as humans, and to have public spaces that provide that kind of feeling, instead of just advertising and logos, is really crucial."

WHO WEARS WOOL by Hilary Zelson
The 10-foot-tall multicolored sheep and lamb made from new and recycled materials will be anchored in Fort Point Channel in early October.
On her inspiration: "Although visually lighthearted, Who Wears Wool will enhance an awareness of the positive contributions that the artists of Fort Point gave back to Boston after the wool industry collapsed," Zelson explains. "The wool industry built a great brick-and-mortar infrastructure, but it was the artists of Fort Point who brought the area back to life, which set the stage for the huge growth of development in Boston today."
On the future of public art: "I am picturing artwork that provides spaces or experiences that don't currently exist. The art will be multisensory. We will sit on it, talk into it, hear its sound, and maybe we will even be lured in by its smell."

A YET-UNTITLED SCULPTURE by Jacob Kulin
On his inspiration: "Inspired by the park's name, both artistic and architectural features speak to notions of symphonic music," Kulin says. "[The sculpture reflects] modern Scandinavian furniture design along with musical instrument shapes like a violin, cello, harp and guitar."
On his dream project: "A monolithic exterior wall sculpture attached to the façade of a Boston high-rise building—the design would develop and grow based on collaborative insight from involved developers, stakeholders and architects. There are many ways to smartly and creatively blend sculpture and architecture."

CLASSIC SPIRIT

YVONNE'S MIXES OLD AND NEW IN THE FORMER HOME OF LOCKE-OBER.

Yvonne's
3 Winter Ploce, Boston
(617-375-9700)
yvonnesboston.com

YOU DON'T EVEN HAVE TO STEP FOOT into Yvonne's to know this isn't your grandfather's Locke-Ober. All you have to do is cross the outside threshold at 3 Winter Place, stepping into a tiny blow-dry bar that serves as the only entrance to Yvonne's. The beauty spot, operated by Johnny Marchio of Enzo & Co., will cater to women, a segment of the population that Locke-Ober didn't even serve till 1971.

"The spirit of Locke-Ober is something we're trying to keep alive," says Yvonne's co-owner Chris Jamison. "But the execution and way to do it is going to be very different in 2015 from the way it was in 1950."

Jamison, co-owner of Lolita Cocina, has spent nearly a year and a half getting the design in place for Yvonne's, and the attention to detail shows throughout the supper club. The main dining room, seating 95 plus 12 at the bar, has been remade with distressed ceiling coffers, marble tile floors and crystal chandeliers, but it still includes the hand-carved Locke-Ober bar, whose mahogany wood detail has been fully restored. A painting across from the bar nods to the mix of old and new that Yvonne's strives for, depicting a nude woman in a garden taking a selfie, a fresh take on Locke-Ober's bygone painting of Madcmoiselle Yvonne, the restaurant's namesake. Aside from its location, every part of the sleek 65-seat library area is new, including four formal dining tables, some sofas, a fireplace and an additional bar.

"A lot of design was driven by the space. We tried to complement what existed with what was new and make it seamless," Jamison says. "We wanted to make sure everything we were putting in was designed to be timeless and could last another 100 years."

While the decor of Yvonne's will garner plenty of attention, the talent assembled in the kitchen is hard to overlook. Tom Berry (Proprietors) will helm the kitchen with Juan Pedrosa (Glenville Stops) at his side, turning out a modern menu of shareable plates with global twists, split into sections of small bites, social plates, stone-fired pitas and feasts. Among the small bites will be oysters Savannah, a nod to Locke-Ober's lobster Savannah that bakes the bivalves with sherry, cream, parmesan and mushrooms. The social plates will offer the largest selection, with dishes such as trumpet mushrooms, broccoli rabe and chicken meatballs, while the stone-fired pitas will feature flavors such as Korean fried chicken. The feasts are expected to be the show-stoppers, with four dishes available, such as a tuna that's crispy on the outside, rare on the inside and sliced over a salad with a dipping sauce made from red-wine vinegar, garlic, basil and soy sauce.

"People assume Locke-Ober was really traditionally French. But back when it was making its mark here, it was bringing ingredients from the Middle East and Far East that people in Boston had never seen before," Jamison says. "I think these guys are trying to introduce some interesting flavor profiles and techniques, kind of reliving those glory days."

The shareable experience is given great emphasis at the dining room bar, overseen by Drink's Will Thompson, which will offer large-format cocktail pitchers for four to six people, leaving the library bar to focus more on classic cocktails.

"We're discouraging people from ordering their own stuff and encouraging the table ordering and sharing," Jamison says. "People want a bunch of different dishes and to taste all of them. Every drink and dish we put out has been with an eye on that."

MEXICAN MIGRATION

WITH CLOSE TO A DOZEN Mexican restaurants, Waltham is a go-to destination for south-of-the-border fare. The latest eatery to throw its sombrero into the local dining scene is Amuleto Mexican Table, which opened last month on restaurant-rich Moody Street.

Amuleto offers a contemporary take on Mexican cuisine, reflecting the experiences and techniques that well-traveled chefs are bringing to Mexico City, says general manager Rogerio Padilla. Menu items are grounded in tradition: Tortillas and tamales are "homemade, fresh every day," and the quesadillas are "real Mexican style, made with fresh masa" but given a creative lift, according to Padilla, a Baja native. Enticing starters include guacamole with pork belly as well as a cauliflower ceviche with salsa fresco, cilantro and olive oil. Braised lamb wrapped in a banana leaf with hominy puree is a popular entree, Padilla says, as is octopus with caramelized onions, mushrooms and chili pepper. Customers can also choose from eight kinds of tacos filled with everything from shrimp and green chili sauce to pork-belly confit and avocado cream; the Jamaican offers an exotic combo of hibiscus flowers, serrano pepper and cotija cheese.

Amuleto is serving dinner Monday through Saturday, along with beer, wine and a cocktail list based mostly on tequila and mezcal. And there are plans to add lunch and brunch as soon as Padilla can hire more staff

NEW BREWS: Jaho Coffee's latest outpost also serves wine and beer.

HELLO TO JAHO

SALEM'S JAHO HAS OPENED ITS THIRD LOCATION, Jaho Coffee Roasters and Wine Bar, blocks from Downtown Crossing on the ground floor of the Kensington. The only cafe in Boston that roasts its coffee on-site, Jaho serves coffee, tea, and sandwiches during the day and a roster of 200 wines, plus craft beers, "artisanal small bites" and dessert at night. Caffeinistas will appreciate brewing techniques ranging from Nitro Iced Coffee to Scraphim Single Brewing, as well as plans for coffee education classes and tasting events in the near future.

GUNNING FOR GRÜNER

Austria's signature white grape variety has traveled a winding road. After the 15 minutes of fame it enjoyed a number of years ago, grüner veltliner settled back into niche status. I've often found the wines to taste excessively green, vegetal and charmless, unless I happened to be drinking one of the riper, more concentrated—and expensive!—examples from the country's handful of superstar producers. But medium-priced grüner has risen in quality, and, if chosen carefully, it can provide fresh, balanced, lovely drinking, especially with lighter fare. The following three are winners. / Sandy Block

LAURENZ V. CHARMING GRÜNER VELTLINER, KAMPTAL, 2013
This is a slightly smoky, herb-scented and earthy wine that shows off the grape's natural fit with vegetarian fare. There is a hint of white pepper, some citrus and apple notes, and a lingering spice in the finish. It's light to medium bodied and very smooth.
$30, Top Shelf Liquors, Boston

LOIMER LANGENLOIS GRÜNER VELTLINER, KAMPTAL, 2014
This grüner is subtle, clean and delicate, with tart lemon-lime undertones and a crisp but mild flavor profile. A wine of finesse rather than intensity or spice, it would definitely appeal to pinot grigio and sauvignon blanc lovers who want to try a new flavor experience.
$24, Winestone, Chestnut Hill

BIOHOF PRATSCH GRÜNER VELTLINER, WEINVIERTEL, 2013
From a district bordering Vienna, this wine has an aroma of somewhat pungent pipe tobacco and earthy root vegetables. It's clean and fresh, with some mineral salinity, and all kinds of interesting grace notes: cilantro, grapefruit rind and peach. This soft, mellow wine is great with a seafood salad.
$14, Martignetti Liquors, Boston

Good Eats: Art & Arepas

New to Brookline Village, artsy cafe The Middle Gray has a veritable rainbow of offerings, including coffee and tea, beer, a refreshing workspace, an art gallery, a performance venue and a largely South American menu—including a superb breakfast sandwich. It's a thin, pita-like arepa griddled to order and stuffed with shredded brisket, crumbles of homemade cheese that fall somewhere between squeaky curds and queso fresco, beautifully fluffy scrambled eggs, scallions and a savory-sweet tomato sauce. The hearty combo is as unique as it is satisfying, and tastes even better with a dash of hot sauce. / Elizabeth Bomze

THE WHEEL DEAL: Bureo is on a mission to reduce pollution one board at a time.

ONE MAN'S TRASH

Forget about netting a profit. Mattapoisett native and Northeastern grad Ben Kneppers and his business partners Kevin Ahearn and David Stover are far more interested in netting, well, nets. Through their company Bureo, they transform discarded fishing gear from Chilean villages into plastic cruiser skateboards and a recently launched line of eyewear. In an effort to reduce the millions of tons of plastic dumped in the ocean annually, Kneppers hopes to provide the company's services "to every fishery in need globally." Hear about Bureo's grassroots beginnings and strategies for combatting ocean pollution when the three sail into the New England Aquarium for a free lecture on Sept. 17. / Hannah Londers

SHOOTING TO THRILL

Millions have seen Herb Greene's portraits of the Grateful Dead, Led Zeppelin and other rock icons, but few know that the photographer lives in nearby Maynard. Locals can get a close-up view of some of his most sought-after photos at the Griffin Museum at Digital Silver Imaging in Belmont, where Dead 50 Years will be on view from Sept. 18 to Oct. 9. Before the exhibit's opening, we caught up with the man behind the camera. / Lorne Bell

TELL US ABOUT THE SAN FRANCISCO SCENE—ABOUT THE DEAD AND THE REST OF THE PSYCHEDELIC BANDS. This was pre-Summer of Love stuff, when the LSD thing was surfacing and Timothy Leary was cruising through town. I was going to state college. I was the guy with long hair and the camera, and it was just a small world. We'd wander up to Haight Street and visit the Grateful Dead up at 710, and then you'd pop over to the Charlatans, which was a block away, and if you wanted you could walk over to the [Jefferson] Airplane and their mansion on Fulton Street. It was a brief period of time. Didn't last a night and a day.

AND YOU WERE SELLING THE PHOTOS TO... Oh, God no. There was no market for them.

BUT YOU HAD A REPUTATION FOR PHOTOGRAPHING BANDS AND GETTING GREAT SHOTS. Yeah. And I did. We were in an opera house and had a burlesque wardrobe, and that was utilized by Jeff Beck. And Rod Stewart and Ronnie Wood got dressed up in that stuff and pranced around the studio singing "Sisters." Then there's the story of Led Zeppelin being freaked out by the Grateful Dead, who showed up in the middle of a session and started shooting off guns in the studio.

HOW DID YOU GAIN SUCH AN INTIMATE LOOK INTO THE DEAD? I was a friend. I was somebody they trusted. I managed to survive 50 years without ever getting thrown out because I never asked for anything and I knew when to leave. And a lot of people didn't. So I ended up with 10 sittings in 30 years.

THAT'S IT? That's it. Brief encounters with the Dead. On Facebook, I'm "the legendary photographer," which is kind of laughable to me.

YOU WERE AT THE DEAD'S 50TH REUNION IN CHICAGO. WHAT WAS THAT LIKE FOR YOU? Justin Kreutzmann, [drummer] Bill Kreutzmann's kid, did the visuals for the show, and they used my stuff lavishly. That stuff got etched into the retinas of a lot of people. It blew me away.

WHY ARE PEOPLE STILL LISTENING TO THE MUSIC AND LOOKING AT THESE PHOTOS? It's really tribal, the Grateful Dead. [So] the interest in the work is relevant. It survived 50 years. And the Dead carried that torch all those years.
